THUMBLESS GLOVE MERITS SUPPORT

Leonard's 'Edict' May Spur Acceptance of new Mitt

UNLIKE OTHER SPORTS, BOXING RESISTS changes. While player unions in other sports become stronger and stronger, giving the athlete everything—and then some—boxing merely goes on in its 'free-lance way, barely changing its look at all.

As a kid, I remember hearing some radio sportscaster say "Very soon, boxing will adopt a rule stating that all boxing rings must be the same size, and all its rules will be the same throughout the world." I don't remember who said it or on what station, but now that I think back, I realize it must have been a goof report, a fictional kind of news story, for you can see just how accurate that report was, for virtually nothing is constant in the sport as you travel from locale to locale.

For instance, New York scores fights on a rounds basis, backing it up with a supplementary point system, giving the winner one point for each round won, the loser zero. A near-stoppage round can see the fighter with the upper hand receiving as many as three points. New Jersey uses the five-point must system. Nevada uses the 10-point system. California scores on the points system, awarding one-point to the winner of a round, none to the loser. The winner may be awarded with up to four points.

Then there's the boxing ring itself. Some states have no commissions to dictate how a ring is set up. In California, their rings have three ropes. New York's rings require four ropes. And on and on.

Why is nothing the same in boxing, as it is in every other sport? Because of its free-lance status, which probably will never change, boxing has too many cooks spoiling its over-cooked broth. It's time for boxing to alter its scarred but yet beautiful face. Change can be good for a product, a person, a sport.

Presently, the concept of the thumbless gloves is being thrust at fighters. This corner is in favor of that thrust. I believe the continued development and eventual use of the thumbless gloves throughout the boxing world would be the biggest asset to the sport since boxers stopped fighting bareknuckle in 1890.

In 1982, Everlast, whose name is synonymous with boxing products, developed a thumbless glove which was put into use in New York in all four, six and eight round bouts. However, the glove had its faults. The fighter was unable to open his hands in the gloves. It was as if the fighter had made a fist and encased it in eight ounces of leather. Once inserted into that early model thumbless glove, a fighter's hand stayed clenched in a fist until the glove was removed. This made it impossible for a fighter to catch punches in his palm and just as impossible to move a man simply by grasping him on either elbow and spinning him, a move the legendary Benny Leonard made famous. Also, those primitive thumbless gloves made it difficult—if not impossible—to clinch or tie up or hold your opponent. Physically, those 1982 thumbless gloves also led to hand cramps, as the hand grip was further back on the hand than in the traditional, "normal" gloves—the one with thumbs.

Critics of the thumbless gloves said, "See! The gloves don't work. In addition to all their other worries, fighters now have to worry about hand cramps." Yet, the time had come for development and use of the thumbless gloves.

Ironically, in New York State, specifically in Madison Square Garden—which served as a launching pad for the thumbless gloves—the Garden's own matchmaker, Harold Weston Jr., had his own brilliant career cut short by a detached retina, caused by an errant thumb.

Earnie Shavers, Gypsy Joe Harris, Leroy Jones, Jorge Ahumada and Leotis Martin are just a few of the fine top contenders in recent years who have had their careers cut short by boxing-related, thumb-induced eye injuries. Want some oldtimers and names from the past? Harry Greb, Tiger Flowers, Kid Norfolk, Virgil Akins, Jamaica Kid and Pete "Kid" Herman all either wound up blind or had their careers shortened because of a poke (it only takes one!) in the eye. The recent sad saga of former Olympic gold medalist Sugar Ray Seales has been played more in the last few months than a top-of-the-chart musical recording.

For a fighter, a thumb in the eye is no joke. It can happen in an actual fight and it can happen in a moment of one of those countless hours a fighter spends in sparring. It just takes one thumb, one accidental (heaven forbid, you don't think any fighter would ever intentionally thumb his opponent, do you?) thumb to force a fighter into retirement—or into hanging around without having the eye surgically repaired.

Sugar Ray Leonard suffered a detached retina in his left eye. He's not sure when the injury occurred, but he certainly knows when it began to bother him—during training for a title match against Roger Stafford in mid-1982. Leonard didn't wait. He sought top professional advice and consultation. Surgery was performed. The surgery was, according to Dr. Ronald Michels, the man who performed the operation, a "complete success."

Now, after undergoing test after test—all of which show Leonard's repaired eye to be completely healed—Leonard is back. I like that. He is back and pushing thumbless gloves on boxing. I like that, too.

Sugar Ray Leonard is boxing's top spokesman, its number one salesman. However, with the boxing establishment as stubborn as it is, Leonard may have to do more than push the gloves. He may have to shove them down everybody's throat.

The time has come for thumbless gloves. Black eyes are one thing. Torn, detached retinas are another.

Don't you think it's better for Sugar Ray Leonard to be pushing thumbless gloves than for fighters to be pushing their thumbs into an opponent's eyes?

"The toughest opponent I ever faced was outside the ring."

I fought my toughest opponent, blindness, and won. Now I'm committed to helping others win that fight. During the time I spent recuperating at Johns Hopkins after my surgery for a detached retina, I learned to appreciate what I had taken for granted. I also learned that blindness can be prevented for thousands of people through research. This is my new challenge and I need your help.

ROUND ONE

BY BEN SHARAV

D.A. MOVES IN ON RESTO, LEWIS

NEW YORK COUNTY DISTRICT ATTORney Robert Morgenthau has hit this reporter with a subpoena to produce for a grand jury all of THE RING's material pertaining to last June's Luis Resto-Billy Collins Jr. fight at Madison Square Garden. The fight, on the Roberto Duran-Davey Moore undercard, ended in a unanimous decision for Resto but was later changed to no-contest by the New York State Athletic Commission, which ruled that Resto had used gloves from which the padding had been illegally removed. As a consequence, the commission suspended Resto from boxing for at least one year and barred his cornermen, Panama Lewis and Pedro Alvarado, for life.

This reporter became involved by meeting with Collins at his room in the New York Statler on the day after the fight and shooting the only close-up, full face photographs which record the damage that the young junior middleweight sustained in the 10-round bout.

The subpoena pertains to "a criminal action prosecuted by The People of The State of New York against John Doe" and demands "any and all information contained in (THE RING's) files concerning the Collins-Resto fight." Presumably, the "John Doe" will be replaced by Lewis and/or Alvarado and/or Resto should the grand jury decide to indict.

THE RING has turned over to a state police investigator the relevant photographs and articles about the incident which appeared in the magazine. But we will assert our First Amendment rights and not turn over any reporters' notes.

Meanwhile, Panama Lewis vehemently proclaims his innocence. Though barred from boxing he still works with fighters at Gleason's Gym near the Garden. "I'm gonna sue the commission and I'm gonna sue Collins," Lewis recently told RING editor Randy Gordon. "And after that I'm gonna sue RING. magazine, because you guys said I'm guilty."

NOT JUST ANY VIOLENCE WILL DO

THE PHILADELPHIA DAILY NEWS reports that Nicodemo Scarfo once considered becoming a boxer but quit after one fight "because it was too violent."

Instead Scarfo became a murderer and the reported head of organized crime in Philadelpia. Scarfo was recently released from federal prison on a gun conviction.

CONTROVERSIAL DECISION

KENNY ("BANG BANG") BOGNER'S WINning streak and top-ten ranking are intact, but the validity of both are in question following the victory which the Trenton, N.J. lightweight attained over Chelsea, Mass.'s Edwin Curet in the Trenton offices of the New Jersey State Athletic Commission. When the two fought in the ring at Resorts International in Atlantic City, Curet was awarded a TKO at 28 seconds of the ninth round by referee Vinnie Rainone, who determined that a gash over Bogner's left eye had rendered him unfit to continue.

Bogner and his mother threw a tantrum in the ring immediately after the stoppage, yelling curses and kicking over television equipment. Bogner's father, Ken Sr., and manager, Scotty Robb promptly protested to deputy commissioner Bob Lee that the cut had been caused by a butt and that as Bogner was leading on the judges' scorecards (5-3 according to Harold Lederman and Frank Brunette and 4-3-1 on Tom Kaczmarek's card), he should be ruled the winner. Jersey rules do state that when a fight is stopped due to a cut caused by an unintentional butt, the fighter ahead on the scorecards is to be awarded a technical decision win. Most observers agreed that the cut had been caused by a clash of heads, or a clash of Bogner's head and Curet's shoulder in the eighth round. But at no time did Rainone call a foul against Curet or issue any kind of warning.

Promoter Bob Arum's subsequent conduct was appalling. Arum had had to win a court suit against the New Jersey Commission—which supported rival promoter Dan Duva, who was claiming rights to Bogner—to get this fight sanctioned and now he claimed, "this whole thing was preordained by what happened in court. As lucrative as this is, I'm seriously going to have to consider whether or not to continue staging fights in Atlantic City."

Bob Lee denies that he and his commission were intimidated by Arum's outburst. But Lee told Curet's managers, Goody and Pat Petronelli, not to come to the hearing that the commission held on Bogner's protest the next week. "He said, 'It's only a routine meeting, just the commissioners looking over the videotape. There's no reason for you to come down from Massachusetts,' " says Goody Petronelli of Lee. So the Petronellis stayed home. But Bogner's manager and a Top Rank representative were present at the hearing and the commission duly altered the result from a knockout for Curet to a technical decision for the hometown fighter, Bogner. The Petronellis found out about it from newsmen.

"That's no way to act," says Goody Petronelli. "Bob Arum, the promoter is supposed to be impartial instead of acting on behalf of one of the fighters. And it shouldn't influence the commission, anyway."

The Petronelli's' attorney Stephen Wainwright, fired off a letter to Bob Lee demanding a rehearing. "We do not intend to stand idly by and have Edwin Curet's rights violated by Top Rank or anyone else who does business in New Jersey."

The New Jersey commission decision may have been the correct one, under the rules. But it owes out-of-state at least a "fighting chance."

FOR YOUR EYES ONLY

ONE OF HOWARD COSELL'S CLASSIC tirades is his denouncement of TV's penchant for using former athletes, or "jocks" as sports announcers. "It makes about as much sense," says Howard, "as hiring to do commentary on a surgical procedure the guy who has had the most operations done on him."

But when the guy who's had the operation is a major celebrity, it's not a bad idea to make him the focus of attention. That's why a natural by-product of Sugar Ray Leonard's successful surgery to have his detached retina repaired, is the Sugar Ray Leonard Center For Eye Research, just established at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Maryland. The center will investigate causes and treatment of blinding disorders that affect the retina and tissues in the back of the eye. Donations may be sent to the Sugar Ray Leonard Center For Eye Research, Johns Hopkins Hospital, 600 N. Wolfe Street, Baltimore, Md. 21205. Taping the first public service spot for the center were Leonard and Howard Cosell.

HARD LUCK JOE

JOE FRAZIER AND SONS ENDED 1983 BY taking a pasting in Las Vegas: Marvis, in the Caesars Palace ring at the fists of Larry Holmes, and Joe, at the Caesars Palace gaming tables. Back east in '84, the Fraziers have been rolling all snake-eyes ever since.

To get his career back on track and to dispel rumors that the first-round knockout loss to Holmes had turned his heart off boxing, Marvis signed with promoter Joe Verne for an early-February 10-rounder in Atlantic City. But while Marvis sparred with cousin Rodney in Joe Frazier's North Philadelphia gym, Marvis' right leg made a noise that, according to Verne, "sounded like a gun going off." Marvis hit the floor in agony; the generator of the noise turned out to be the snapping of a tendon in his ankle. Marvis of course had to pull out of his comeback fight and undergo surgery. The early prognosis is that he will be out of action six months.

Joe Frazier didn't fare much better a short while later when he tried to make the drive in his Cadillac from Philadelphia to Atlantic City. Joe pulled over at the side of a New Jersey road to see what it was that was making a rattling noise in his car. A female state trooper came by to check Joe's license and hauled the former Heavyweight Champion in when she noticed a firearm in his gym bag. The gun turned out to be registered in Pennsylvania but not in New Jersey. Charges against Frazier, who says he needs a gun for "protection" (He often carries large sums of cash), were dropped.

Back home in Philadelphia, son Hector Frazier, who goes by the name of Smokin' Joe Jr., suffered his first pro loss, getting knocked out by Mike Mungin in the third round of a lightweight bout. The Fraziers' lone winning note was provided by Rodney, who stopped Woody Clark in the fifth round in a fight on the same card. Alas, Rodney was later discovered to have broken his jaw during the bout.

BARTENDERS' TRIVIA CORNER

WHICH FIGHTER HAD THE greatest differential between his heaviest and lightest weights in world title fight appearances? Name the opponents in each case. (A free Heavyweight Champions poster will go to one reader who sends in the answer. The winner will be picked at random from all the correct answers we receive during the first week that responses come in.)

February's question: After Cassius Clay beat Sonny Liston in 1964, he announced that he was changing his name. What did he say his new name was? 2. How many times did he capture the WBA heavyweight championship? Name the fighters whom he won it from.

Answer: Most of you went for the obvious, but incorrect answers. The only person to answer both parts correctly was Ken Pisani, of Fresh Meadows, N.Y., who gets a poster. His answer was: "1. Cassius Clay first changed his name to Cassius X, then to Muhammad Ali. 2. Clay/Ali captured the WBA title four times. From Sonny Liston (1964), Ernie Terrell (1967), George Foreman (1974) and Leon Spinks (1978).

PUNCHLINES

"TERRIBLE" TIM WITHERSPOON, ON HIS chances of getting a rematch with World Heavyweight Champ Larry Holmes: "I don't wanna say Holmes is ducking me, but after he fought me, he went home and told his wife to get rid of all the spoons in the house. He don't wanna look at another 'Spoon.' "

BOBBY CHACON, AFTER TAKING A BATtering from Ray Mancini in their WBA lightweight title fight: "Ray kept saying, 'We're friends, we're friends.' So why'd he have to beat me up so bad?"

RAY MANCINI, GIVING A MESSAGE to the lightweight contenders who've been badmouthing him: "I'm tired of hearing that I'm ducking people. I fight anybody they put in front of me. All those guys who say I'm ducking them—Let them come after me and see what happens. I'm not going anywhere."

A 'MODEST PROPOSAL' FROM A MAN DRENCHED IN BEER.

BY MICHAEL KATZ

IN THE AFTERMATH OF THE RAY MANCINI-Bobby Chacon beerbath, perhaps human nature should be banned. Some people would outlaw boxing as cruel and inhuman. They should concentrate on the so-called boxing fans. We're talking about you, Joe, so put down that beer can and pay attention.

This is a modest proposal that from now on all boxing cards be held in television studios with limited live audiences. The audiences would be limited to those people with prefrontal lobotomies.

It's the only way, it seems, to do away with violence from the stands. Violence in the ring is limited by the rules of the game. Low blows, thumbs and butts are against those rules, and while they frequently occur, it is rare to see two boxers throw beer cans at each other or even at the referee.

What happened when Referee Richard Steele mercifully stopped Bobby Chacon from taking further needless punishment from the piston-like hands of Ray (Boom Boom) Mancini was not as bad as some ringside riots in the past.

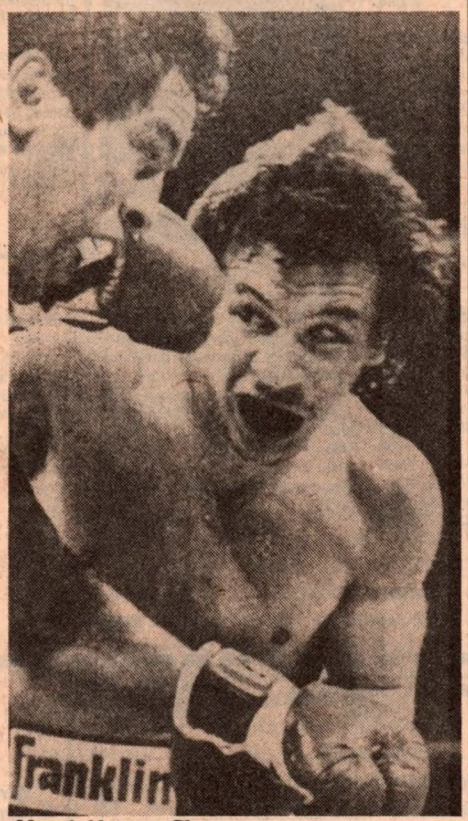
When Lupe Pintor knocked out poor Johnny Owen of Britain in Los Angeles, and Owen was taken out on a stretcher later to die of his injuries, the animals showered the vanquished warrior with whatever was in their beer cups—and it was not only beer.

Shortly thereafter, partly in retaliation for what had happened to one of their lads in the States, an angry and drunken British crowd showered Marvelous Marvin Hagler after the American had stopped Alan Minter. This time, the animals did not bother to take the beer out of the bottles before throwing it.

In Reno, after Mancini-Chacon, I got splashed with beer. This was quite a comedown, at least alcoholically, from getting hit with a bottle of Remy-Martin at the Felt Forum.

But while the crowd at the Lawlor Events Center on the campus of the University of Nevada at Reno was not as bad as some, it served as a reminder that ringside often is a more dangerous place to be than in the ring.

Sugar Ray Leonard risked his eyes just as much as the HBO ringside commentator as if he had been taking punches. He was saved, perhaps, by Ollie Dunlop, one of his aides. As soon as Steele stopped the fight, Dunlop pitched forward. From his seat behind Leonard, he fell on top of the fighter, forcing him beneath the ringside table. It wasn't that Dunlop was acting quickly, however, He was falling forward because an unidentified flying object, presumed to be an ice cube, thrown from the stands in the back, struck Dunlop on the back of the head, cutting him and knocking him to the floor. James Anderson, Leonard's Chief of Security, made sure the fighter did not get off the floor until it was safe.



Mancini batters Chacon: The fans "refused to see what was happening."

One had to sense the danger. It was apparent as soon as the cab pulled up to the arena that this was no college crowd. Outside the arena, beer cans were much in evidence an hour before the first preliminary. And during that first fight, an eight-round contest between two young and earnest middleweights, the sense of the crowd became clear. The kids, not the most talented in the world, kept trying but the crowd booed, stopping only when one or the other was wobbled momentarily. It was then the crowd became excited. It sensed blood.

Had this happened at the Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles or the Felt Forum in New York, no doubt the Mexican and Puerto Rican fans would have been blamed. The predominantly white crowd at Reno demonstrated what Caucasians also can not be allowed to congregate together in large numbers.

The Reno crowd's blood thirst was not sated when the referee halted the main event. It was a Chacon crowd and many of his fans refused to see what was happening. This time, it was clear, and thankfully it was clear to Richard Steele, there would be no miraculous Chacon comeback from the edge of what the fighter calls "the black lights." This was not a washed-up Bazooka Limon or Cornelius Boza-Edwards hitting him, but a young, strong full lightweight who, in the round before had managed to throw the amazing total of 173 punches, most of which were designed to knock Chacon's block off.

Chacon's left eye was bloodied and closing. On the rare occasion when he could muster enough strength to punch back, he could not hurt Mancini. Suffice it to way that Chacon himself immediately told Steele, "Thank you, Richard," and his trainer, Joe Ponce, said he would have stopped the bout himself if his man had reached the corner after the third round.

Steele's action provoked howls not only from the animals in the stands but those behind typewriters. One writer, who probably thought the Duk-Koo Kim fight was stopped too soon, roasted Steele. This is the same writer, incidentally, who thought Leonard was crazy for coming out of retirement and facing the dangers of the ring. It is a hell of a lot more dangerous when your back is on the ropes and you're being pummeled by a younger, bigger and stronger man.

Yes, there were questions about Steele's action. Dr. Donald Romeo, the ringside physician, came over and wanted to know how come Steele did not at least consult him before stopping the fight. Davey Pearl, another Nevada referee, said at first he thought Steele had acted too quickly.

But upon watching replays, Dr. Romeo said "if the fight had gone on another round or two, we'd have had a one-eyed fighter." And Pearl said, after watching the fight again, "I wanted to embrace Richard for what he did." Jim Jacobs, the astute fight manager (astute, at least, when he agrees with me), was overheard arguing with an angry Chacon fan later that night.

"The referee, using the knowledge and experience he has accumulated over the years, knowing the fighters, was impeccable," said Jacobs.

And Steele was. This, after all, was the same referee who, despite the frantic ravings of Ferdie Pacheco on the microphone, allowed Chacon to continue with a bloody cut to defeat Boza-Edwards eight months earlier.

"It is important to know the fighters," said Steele, unquestionably one of the finest referees in the world, the morning of the fight over breakfast. "I knew Chacon does not let blood bother him. But if a cut is bad, of course I'll call in the doctor. Or if it's bad and the fighter has no chance of winning, I'll stop it."

And that was this case. Chacon's cut, already dripping into his closing left eye, was bad enough for Steele not to have to call in the doctor. But Steele did not stop the fight simply on cuts. He stopped it because Chacon's case was helpless. Only the bloodthirsty would want it to go on. Only the people who sometimes forget that boxing is more than just a magnificent test of courage and daring. It is also a sport. □

COME OUT WRITING

THE OLD SCHOOL

YOU KNOW THAT YOU'RE GETting too old to box when...
- your cornerman takes out your mouthpiece, and your teeth come out with it.
- you fall asleep during the pre-fight instructions.
- you're too tired to answer the bell for the first round.
- you have a rocking chair in your corner instead of a stool.
- you're a contender for your grandson's title.
- you can remember the last time that Don King combed his hair.

LIAN SHOEMAKE, SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

THE KING OF COMEDY?

DON KING EXPOSES HIMSELF AS A HYPOcrite in your revealing interview ("King O.K.'s Coetzee Bout In South Africa," February). As Ben Sharav accurately points out in the introduction, King has long-denounced competitors who have done business with South Africa, and now he's willing to do the same thing.

"Larry Holmes disgraced himself," says King. "For a few measly bucks he would sell his soul." Well King seems willing, even eager, to sell his soul for money, "few measly bucks" or not.

CLYDE WEISMAN, BERWICK, PENNA.

THERE IS NOTHING WRONG WITH Don King's offer to sell a Gerrie Coetzee fight to South Africans and your attempt to drum up a scandal around it is most unfair. What is Don King supposed to do if Coetzee and his co-promoter, Cedric Kushner, wish for Gerrie to fight in his home country? Should King go to court and try to stop them? Or would you suggest that he refuse to take any of the revenues, which he has a full and legal right to do?

King gave Gerrie Coetzee an opportunity to fight for the title, and Coetzee took advantage of it and won it. It is unreasonable to expect Don King to run Gerrie's life for him as well.

VIRGIL FERRETTI, AUBURN, ALA.

DON KING COMES OFF AS AN ARROgant, pretentious ass. Says the ever-charitable Don: "I tried very hard to instill in Larry Holmes the qualities that I think would be nice for a young man ... to embody." Or how about this gem: "He (Michael Dokes) just has to be worked with, disciplined, talked to and given some tender loving care." How sweet. Maybe he might even develop into "a credit to his race."

King: Paternalistic sermonizing?

Just what does King think he is? Is he Holmes' and Dokes' promoter, or their father! If a white promoter spoke about adult black fighters in King's condescending manner, the newsmen would have a field day pillorying him as a racist.

I don't blame Larry Holmes for finally deciding to run his own life and tell Don King to shove off. It's a wonder that Larry put up with that paternalistic sermonizing for as long as he did.

CHARLES TRUMBULL, HENDERSON, KY.

YOU QUOTE DON KING AS SAYing, "Roberto Duran was with me for 10 years and turned down $10 million to stay with me rather than go behind my back. Before the Sugar Ray Leonard fight in Montreal, Leonard's people and Shelley Finkel went to Panama and offered him $10 million to go along with them."

I have never been to Panama. Next time you quote Don King making an inaccurate statement about me, at least spell my name right.

SHELLY FINKEL, NEW YORK, N.Y.

REMEMBER CHACON

WHY DOESN'T THE IBF STEP IN and give title recognition to Bobby Chacon as they did for Marvin Hagler and now Larry Holmes? Why should the WBC (or any sanctioning organization, for that matter) have such a significant and corrupt influence on the direction and duration of a champion's career?

Also, when is THE RING going to recognize the cruiserweights? Just because sub-200-pounders generally can't compete with world-rated heavyweights doesn't mean they should be denied the opportunity to fight.

ROBERT I. SHAPIRO, FRAMINGHAM, MASS.

Editor's note: The Ring opposed the WBC for its apparent bias in the Chacon-King-Camacho case last year. But either way, The Ring maintains that the legitimate World Junior Lightweight Champion is Roger Mayweather, the WBA titleholder, and not Chacon or Hector Camacho.

As to Mr. Shapiro's final question, regarding the cruiserweights, our new answer is contained elsewhere in this issue.

PRESUMPTUOUS RAY

I HEARD RAY LEONARD WAS COMING back but I didn't know it was as the first Commissioner of Boxing. Where does he get off demanding that his opponents wear only thumbless gloves? Next he'll be telling them what color trunks to wear so as to be less distracting to his concentration and easier on his tender eyes.

Leonard apparently hasn't realized that public opinion has not elected him commissioner, nor will it re-elect him champ. Men who are champions, such as Marvin Hagler, should be applauded for refusing to bow to Leonard's demand. Titles, after all, are earned in the ring, not in the press; so if Leonard can no longer safely compete as do all other fighters then maybe he should retire . . . again.

HOLMES SELF-SERVING

LARRY HOLMES IS COUNTING ON wide public support in his self-serving war with the WBC, but I, for one, don't think boxing fans will take Larry's side. This isn't even like the Bobby Chacon case, where Chacon, the WBC junior lightweight champion, was punished by the WBC for fighting the number-one contender. This is just the opposite. Larry Holmes, however he tries to mask it, is ducking the top contender, Greg Page.

Holmes is now fighting John Tate for the IBF title. The IBF is a joke to boxing fans and Holmes, with successive fights against Scott Frank, Marvis Frazier and now Tate, is fast becoming a joke himself.

I welcome the WBC matching Greg Page against Tim Witherspoon for the vacant title. These are two fine heavyweights, both of whom want to fight the best guys out there. Those are the championship qualities that the public ultimately will demand.

HOWARD HERSHEY, CUMBERLAND, MD.

RE THE STATEMENTS MADE BY Greg Page concerning Larry Holmes ("Greg Page At Large," December): First of all, Page's statements were without thought or regard to the subject at hand. Page continually labeled Holmes as "gutless" and "classless". This, coming from a fighter who virtually quit when opponents such as George Chaplin and Trevor Berbick applied a bit of pressure. When Page taunted and humiliated Scott LeDoux, he exemplified for us all, the meaning of the word "classless."

Holmes has proven that he is one of the greatest heavyweights of all-time and his reasons for not fighting Page are clear. He wishes to fight WBA champion Gerrie Coetzee for the enormous purse. Really, wouldn't any fighter rather fight for $25 million than for $2.5 million? Why would a man who has fought the likes of Cooney, Shavers, Ali, Norton, Spinks, Weaver and Witherspoon be scared of an overhyped, overrated, overweight, undertrained loudmouth?

I just hope that Holmes teaches Page the finer points of boxing, after he destroys Coetzee. That is, if Witherspoon doesn't do it first.

Q What was the scoring in the second Ali-Norton bout?

—GURLAT SINGH
North Humberside, Eng.

A Referee Dick Young, 7-5, Ali; judge George Latka, 6-5, Norton; judge John Thomas, 6-5, Ali. (Bout was scored under rules of California Commission, which give winner of each round from one to four points, and loser none. No points are awarded for an even round.) The fight was held on September 10, 1973 at the Forum in Inglewood, California.

Q Is former world light heavyweight champion Tommy Loughran living?

—EAMONN LOUGHRAN
No. Ireland

A Loughran died in Altoona, Pa. on July 7, 1982.

Q Would you please print some information on my father, Benjamin L. Gan, who fought as "Small Montana"?

—JOHN WILLIAM GAN
Troutdale, Ore.

A Small Montana started boxing as a pro in his native country, the Philippines, in 1931. He came to the U.S. in 1934 and won New York/California recognition as world flyweight champion by outpointing Midget Wolgast in Oakland on September 16, 1935. Sixteen months later, on January 19, 1937, Montana was outpointed by Benny Lynch in a 15-rounder for the undisputed title. He continued to box until Luis Castillo stopped him in two rounds on October 12, 1941 in Mexico City. Small Montana died in La Carlotta, Philippines, on August 4, 1976.

Q Can you print some information about William (Soldier Buck) Buckrop? He had 127 fights from 1920 to 1931, losing only six and drawing three. He was middleweight champion of the South and fought Greb (twice), Ross, Kron, Fay, and Stribling. He had Greb on the deck in both (title) fights, but lost on points. He's really a great person and was a great fighter. P.S.: He's also my mother-in-law's boyfriend.

—BOB GRIMES
Crestwood, Ky.

A Young Stribling stopped Soldier Buck in three rounds in Memphis on October 30, 1925. Greb outpointed Buck over 10 rounds in Louisville on June 1, 1925 and again, over eight rounds, in Nashville on December 14, 1925. Neither of these seem to have been title clashes, although Greb was world middleweight champion at the time. Buck never fought Barney Ross. Presume you mean Fay Kaiser when you mention Fay. Would appreciate any further information on Soldier Buck.

VETERAN BOXERS' BEAT

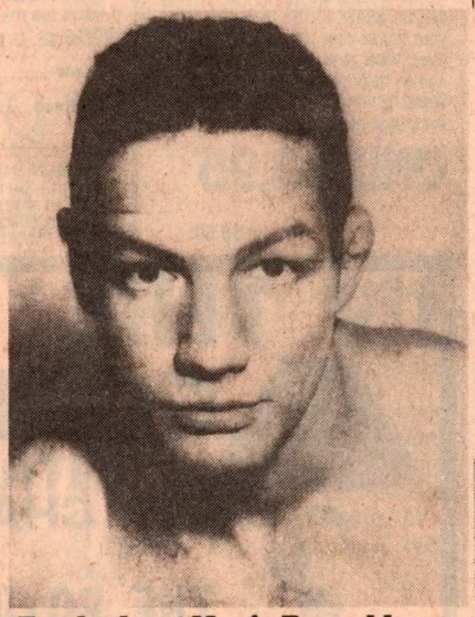
BY CHARLIE SPINA

HE HAS BEEN THE RING ANNOUNCER FOR every heavyweight champion from Jack Dempsey to Larry Holmes. He has appeared in many television commercials and has performed in nightclubs around the world. His face is familiar to millions who tune in to the weekly, nationally-syndicated "All-Star Wrestling Show." We're talking about Joe McHugh, the Vice-President of the Lehigh Valley (Pa.) Old Time Boxers' Association. Joe, who comes from Allentown, Pa., has been called "The Living Legend of The Ring" by many sportswriters. Boxing is lucky to have a man such as McHugh around, and the All-American city of Allentown is just as fortunate to have All-American Joe McHugh as one of its residents.

On December 5, 1983, boxing historian Billy Mahoney and his committee raised $10,000 toward their goal of $35,000 needed for the Young Corbett III Statue. The money was raised at a dinner party in Fresno, Calif., for the former welterweight champion, who compiled a record of 123-11-17, fighting in four decades (1919-1942). Mahoney, who emceed the boxing segment of the dinner, a film of Corbett outpointing Jackie Fields for the title over 10 rounds in 1933. The crowd was then entertained by the music of the famous accordionist Dick Contino. Mahoney and his committee will be working throughout 1984 to help raise the needed $35,000 for the statue. They have a big banquet planned for October 12, 1984, and hope to have Frank Sinatra and Sylvester Stallone attend. Former welterweight king Jimmy McLarnin, now 77, and the man who beat Corbett for the title, has assured Mahoney he will attend. Former area fighters who did attend the dinner were Al Manfredo and Wayne Thornton. McLarnin had planned on attending, but had to cancel because of his wife being ill. We hope Mrs. McLarnin is up and around now.

Gene "Spider" Mock has replaced boxing writer George Luckman as Chief Historian for the Golden State Boxer's and Wrestler's Association. Luckman, along with Abe Hochheiser, will share the duties as publicists for the association. Joey Abramson, who had been Secretary-Treasurer for the Association, resigned, leaving those two posts open. They were filled by Shevaun O'Sullivan (Secretary) and Fred Murphy (Treasurer). Marshall Wright became Executive Director of the GSBWA.

Nick Spanakos, a former New York Golden Gloves champion who is now Doctor Nick Spanakos, is teaching at the State University of New York's Brooklyn Educational Center. This year, Dr. Spanakos will come out with a book which details his travels to 80 countries during a 27-year odyssey. Best of luck to you, Doc.



Two looks at Maxie Rosenbloom: as a fighter and as he looked in the early 1960's.

Norman Conrad, former New England light heavyweight who fought many outstanding opponents, was severely injured in an automobile accident in Maine several months ago and remains hospitalized.

Former junior welterweight king Jackie "Kid" Berg sends greetings to all his friends from his home in West Sussex, England. On June 28, Berg will celebrate his 75th birthday. He looks great and says he feels the same way. Jack and his wife, Morya, make their home at 24, The Roystons, Angmering on Sea, West Sussex, England, They'd welcome a line or two from their friends.

Happy birthday to former middleweight champion Johnny Wilson, who turns 91 on March 23. Johnny is the oldest ex-champion alive and lives in the Boston area (address unknown). May you enjoy many more birthdays in good health, champ. . . Also, a Happy Birthday to former welterweight king Virgil Akins, who turned 56 on March 10.

The late Maxie Rosenbloom, former great light heavyweight king, was recently selected for induction into the Jewish Sports Hall of Fame. The meeting, held in Israel by the International Selection Committee, was chaired by Haskell Cohen of the United States. Rosenbloom was born in New York City on September 6, 1904. He began his career in 1923 and fought until 1939, winning all but 35 out of 289 bouts. He later became an actor. He died in Los Angeles, California, on March 6, 1976.

Former light heavyweight champ Joey Maxim is a casino host at the Ambassador Hotel in Las Vegas. Maxim, who retired in 1959, had a total of 300 bouts (amateur and pro) in 23 years of boxing. During that time, he was knocked out only once, in 1943, in the first round against Curtis "Hatchet Man" Sheppard. Maxim's durability and ring savvy is evident, as he returned against Sheppard 21 days later (that would be illegal today) to trim Sheppard over 10 rounds. A handful of the other top men Maxim fought were Jersey Joe Walcott, Ezzard Charles, Archie Moore, Floyd Patterson, Lloyd Marshall, Jimmy Bivins, Nate Bolden, Gus Lesnevich, Freddie Mills and Sugar Ray Robinson. Maxim claims that Archie Moore was the best fighter he ever faced.

REST IN PEACE

William Demarest, 91, veteran movie actor, died of a heart attack on December 29, 1983, in Palm Springs, California. A veteran of more than 100 films, Demarest was well-known for his role of Uncle Charlie O'Casey on the "My Three Sons" TV show in the '60's. He was born in St. Paul, Minn., on February 27, 1892, and later moved to New Jersey. In the 1920's he had a short-lived career, fighting under the name of Battling McGovern. His career took him from the ring to vaudeville to Hollywood's first talking movies. He appeared with Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer," and 19 years later was nominated for an Oscar for "The Jolson Story." In 70 years of show business and public entertainment, be became one of Hollywood's most beloved personalities. R.I.P.

Boxing's Biggest Attraction Is After More Than Money

SUGAR RAY LEONARD: 'I'LL BE BETTER THAN EVER!'

UNITED AIRLINES 175 ROARED DOWN THE runway at Denver's Stapleton International Airport, its destination, Reno, Nevada. On board the flight was HBO's expert boxing analyst and former welterweight/junior middleweight champion of the world, Sugar Ray Leonard, who was going to Reno to cover the Ray Mancini-Bobby Chacon WBA lightweight championship fight. Leonard tried not to show his nervousness at the takeoff on the wintery-white, snow-blown runway, but he has more success in hiding his pain in the ring than on an airplane. His hands tightened on the armrests and his body stiffened. It was a vast contrast to his fluid fighting style and loose, personable, out-of-the-ring mannerisms.

"I've got control of the situation when I'm fighting," said Leonard. "I can do anything I feel like doing in the ring. I've got no control sitting here in this plane. I feel helpless. Maybe they'll let me fly the plane!"

On November 9, 1982, 26-year-old Sugar Ray Leonard stood in a makeshift ring in the Baltimore Civic Center and announced that, after 5½ years as a pro, with 32 victories in 33 fights, after earning nearly $40 million and the love and respect of everyone he met, he was retiring from boxing.

"Marvin Hagler and I can make a lot of money by fighting each other," said Leonard to the Civic Center audience, rubbing his thumb and fingers of his right hand together. The crowd held its' collective breath. Some people were heard to say excitedly, "He's gonna fight Hagler!" Then, Leonard spoke again.

"Unfortunately," said Leonard, taking a breath, "it's never going to happen."

So there in Baltimore, it ended where it all began on February 5, 1977, with Leonard decisioning Luis "The Bull" Vega over six rounds and in the process earning a still-existing record purse for a debuting fighter—$40,000.

Leonard's retirement was accepted by the sports world, but reluctantly. Those who accepted his retirement also fully accepted that the retirement came because of the retinal surgery which had been performed on Leonard in May, 1982. Those who didn't accept his retirement felt Leonard was using his eye as an excuse and a way out—that he had no intention of fighting Marvelous Marvin Hagler. Still others had the feeling of being cheated—cheated out of seeing a brilliant young champion who was still getting better and not yet in his prime, being forced by injury and pressure to hang up his gloves.

Nobody knew any better than Leonard that his retirement was premature. He knew it even as he addressed the media and his fans in Baltimore. Only minutes before going out to make his announcement, Leonard had been in a small room adjoining the Civic Center's Main arena with some relatives, friends and business associates from HBO. Politely, he asked everybody except his wife, Juanita, and business manager, Mike Trainer, to leave. Then, he admitted to them he was getting "cold feet".

"I told then I wasn't sure I should go through with retiring," said Leonard. "We talked about it for a few minutes. We talked about going out on top and we talked about my eye. All the talk did was convince me to announce my retirement. But it didn't help me to convince myself that retirement was indeed the right thing to do."

Pretty Karen from Chicago walked from the coach section of the airplane into the first-class section and over to Leonard's seat. Leonard stopped talking to the writer and looked up at the teenager and smiled.

"May I have your autograph?" she asked shyly.

Leonard was as prepared for Karen's request as he is for every fight. He reached into the pocket in the seat in front of him and pulled out a glossy black and white photo of himself in a boxing pose. He signed it, then drew a "Happy Face" under his signature. He handed the photo to Karen and thanked her for asking. Her face lit up when he handed her the autograph.

"Good luck on your fight tomorrow, Sugar Ray," she said.

Leonard chuckled.

"I'm not fighting tomorrow. Ray Mancini and Bobby Chacon are."

Karen blushed. "Well, good luck whenever you fight!" she said.

In September, 1982, Leonard was aboard the Queen Elizabeth II en route to London, England, for a series of one-hour television documentaries called "The World's Greatest Athletes." He was asked if he would box an exhibition with Steve Sinclair, a 6'1", 185-pound sailor who had a 30-5 amateur boxing record, a man Leonard described as being "very strong with a real hard punch."

"There were a bunch of rich businessmen and college students aboard," recalled Leonard. "In fact, I think that's all there was.

Sugar Ray and Barry Tompkins comprise two-thirds of HBO's boxing announce team. The third member is Larry Merchant.

I had been thinking about testing out the eye for awhile and figured that was as good a time as any.

"We were moving around and playing, when, all of a sudden, WHAM!, he drops a shot on my eye with a right. It was the first time since the surgery I had gotten hit on it. I stepped back as if I expected something to happen. Nothing did happen. My eye was still there. I could still see my opponent. I said to myself, 'I'm okay! I'm okay!' Then I decided to go after the guy, repay him for the shot. You could see he was throwing harder now. He had hit me hard once and I guess he figured he could do it again. I made him miss a few shots, then stepped inside and really cracked him a solid body shot. He went down. We finished the exhibition with nothing else happening, but I knew then that I could fight on if I wanted to."

"I just want you to know I'm a big fan of yours," said Marvin from Denver. "May I have your autograph?"

"Sure, no problem," said Leonard. As he was signing a photo, he was asked by Marvin, "How's this guy Howard you're coming back against? I hear he's tough."

"They're all tough!" said Leonard. Then he punctuated his autograph with a "Happy Face."

On April 23, 1983, Leonard was a commentator on CBS, along with Tim Ryan and Gil Clancy, for the Marlon Starling-Kevin Howard 12-round fight in Hartford, Connecticut.

"I had breakfast with Howard the morning of the fight," said Leonard. "He looked like this," and sucked his cheeks in. "He was too dried out trying to make weight. I believe he can make 147, but he's got to eat right and train right to do so. He'll be up for me, though, believe me. They all get up when they fight me. I don't care what anybody says—Howard was a rough opponent to take on in my first fight in two years. Starling couldn't stop him and neither could Mark Medal, who's been knocking everybody out. Howard is hungry. He's thinking of his future. To face me was the chance of a lifetime for him. Going into the fight, he had to know that if he beat me he would have been the hottest name in sports. Barbara Walters would've interviewed him!"

Talking of Leonard's comeback was a natural segway to the question, "Why are you doing this, Ray? Why are you returning to the ring?"

Leonard's boyishly-handsome face turned serious as his computer-quick mind digested the question and formulated an answer. His answer was returned with the speed of one of Leonard's six-punch combinations.

"I have a chance to do something," explained Leonard. "I have this Heaven-sent possession of athletic skills and ability few people have. I wasn't even at my peak when I retired. I felt back then that I was still a year or two away from being at my athletic best. I'm there now. I believe that after a tuneup fight or two, I'll not only be as good as I was, but better than ever. Physically, I know I'm stronger. I know I'm hitting much harder than ever before. I'm coming back, not for the money, but for a chance at real greatness. It was something I was after and something I was denied having. Now, my eye is better. I've got 20/15 vision in both eyes. Dr. Ronald Michels, the man who operated on me, gave me the green light to resume my career. He didn't have to repeatedly tell me the dangers of boxing. I know all that. I just wanted to know if my eye was 100 per cent. Dr. Michels said it was. I've asked him if I could get hit on it without anything happening, like when I boxed the exhibition on the Q.E. II. He told me that was something he couldn't predict or forecast. It (the injury) happened once, perhaps it can happen again. Perhaps it won't, no matter how hard a punch I take. I'm willing to take my chances."

Asked if he was worried that opponents might deliverately aim for the eye, Leonard said, "Let 'em aim all they want. That'll be like then saying, 'I'm gonna throw this right at your eye, Ray. Here it comes!' My fights will all be easy if every opponent has nothing in mind but to go gunning for my eye."

Joe and Grant, two Denver businessmen, stood in the aisle two seats in front of Leonard and the writer, chatting with each other. They were waiting for their chance to talk with boxing's favorite and most famous personality. Their opportunity came when Leonard was flexing his right bicep for the writer, showing him how much larger the muscle has gotten since the world had last seen Leonard fight—in February, 1982.

"I wouldn't want to get hit with that," said Grant, seizing the opportunity to talk with Leonard.

"How do you stay so trim?" asked Joe, as the two pounced upon Leonard with almost as much speed as Leonard pounces upon his opponents. The writer—annoyed—put his note pad down as Leonard smilingly talked with the two and signed autographs for them. On the bottom of each autograph, he again drew a "Happy Face."

"Sorry, said Leonard, turning back to the writer after a few minutes. "I guess they recognized me!"

Not even Leonard knows exactly how he suffered a detached retina in his left eye. One popular theory claims it happened against Thomas Hearns on September 16, 1981, a fight Leonard won by TKO at 1:45 of the 14th round.

"I doubt it happened that night," said Leonard. "Tommy didn't hit me there hard enough or often enough to cause the damage. Forget the swelling. That came because of an injury I had under the eye, on my cheekbone. About two weeks earlier, I had been sparring with Odell Hadley and he hit me with an accidental elbow. I suffered a bone bruise from it. The injury was really painful, so Mike Trainer wanted to postpone the fight. I told him not to postpone it. Aside from the eye, I was physically ready. I was mentally ready. Perhaps the fight should have been postponed, but I just didn't want that. I only fought once after that, against Bruce Finch (February 15, 1982). The bruised area hurt me even against Finch. But it's fine, now. I guess it just needed time to heal.

Following the third-round stoppage of Finch, Leonard took a short rest, then went into training for Roger Stafford. During training, Leonard continually saw "spots and butterflies" through his left eye. An eye doctor in Syracuse, N.Y., prescribed some drops for Leonard to use. When the drops failed to rid Leonard of the "spots and butterflies," Leonard sought the advice of a specialst. It was found he had a torn, partially-detached retina. On May 9, 1982, Leonard was operated on in Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, Md., by Dr. Ronald Michels, a Professor of Ophthalmology at Johns Hopkins University.

The operation was, according to Dr. Michels, "a complete success." Since the surgery, Dr. Michels has examined Leonard several times. According to him, "Leonard had made a full and complete recovery." In response to the question of what the risk factor is for a re-occurance of the injury to the same eye, Dr. Michels said, "We don't have any numbers (statistics) to base a theory on. Assuming the eye has healed well, I'd have to say the risk factor will be about the same as it is in every other fight for every other fighter."

Sitting in his seat on the aisle, Leonard was showing the writer where it was that Odell Hadley elbowed him. Suddenly, he looked up. Two women, perhaps in their late-20's, were standing next to his seat.

"Hi, Ray," said the shorter one, leaning on the seat in front of the young superstar for support. She was drunk.

"Hi!" Leonard responded.

"Are you going to Reno for shum shkiing?" slurred the drunk one.

"No, I'm going for a fight."

"Oh, who're ya' fighting?"

"I'm not fighting. I'm going to cover a fight. Are both of you going skiing?"

The inebriated lass shook her head negatively, then pointed to her tall, quiet girlfriend standing next to her, almost falling over as she pointed.

"She is."

"Are you a good skier?" inquired Leonard of the friend.

"I'm not bad," she said. "I got racked up once, though. I've got a big scar over here," and pointed to her left knee.

The writer drew a deep breath, shook his head and looked out the window into the darkness, staring at the small, flashing red light on the end of the wing.

Seeing the writer's disgust, the tall woman said, "Well, I'd better get my friend back to her seat. As you can see, she's not in very good shape. Before we go, can we have your autograph?"

Two more glossy photos were removed from the seat pocket by Leonard and signed. A "Happy Face" was drawn on each one.

"It's a shame," said the tall, sober young lad. "Tomorrow morning, my friend is never going to remember meeting you!"

On December 10, 1983, Leonard boxed an exhibition at Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, D.C. He held a press conference following the six rounds of boxing, three each with Herman Epps and Odell Leonard. Leonard made two significant announcements at the press conference. One was expected. The other was not. In the expected announcement, Leonard made clear his intentions to return to the ring. In the unexpected announcement, Leonard said he would require his opponents to wear thumbless gloves.

"I believe thumbless gloves should be made mandatory," stated Leonard. "I think the young fighters, the raw beginners, they are the ones who should start getting used to thumbless gloves. I can understand why so many pros dislike them—they've never seen a thumbless glove, then, suddenly, they're told 'Start wearing these!' It's especially true in New York, where thumbless gloves are mandatory in bouts less than 10 rounds. Once you get used to them, they feel pretty good."

Most of the response THE RING has received in the way of letters and phone calls regarding Leonard's demand that his opponents wear thumbless gloves has been favorable. Most. Not all.

"What right does this crybaby have to insist that his oppoents wear thumbless gloves?" asks a fan from Florida.

"The next thing you know, Leonard will be insisting to pick the color trunks of his opponents," writes another fan.

To those fans, Leonard merely answers, "Nobody is under duress here. We go to the man. We ask if he'd be interested in a match against me. If he says 'Yes', we explain about our belief in the thumbless gloves and ask him to use them. Nobody pulls a gun out and puts it to the guy's head and says 'Stick your hands in these and don't take them out until after the fight!' If he wants to fight me, he has to use thumbless gloves. If he doesn't want to wear them, I'll just fight somebody else, that's all."

"Ladies and gentlemen," said the Captain of United flight 175.

"I have good news and bad news." Leonard took a deep breath, sat back in his seat and looked straight ahead.

"The good news is that we'll be on the ground in 15 minutes. The bad news is that due to icy runways in Reno, we'll be on the ground in 15 minutes in San Francisco.

"San Francisco!" shrieked Leonard, jumping out of his seat. "I've gotta get to Reno. I don't want to go to San Francisco! Get me out of here!"

The writer playfully offered to show Leonard to the door.

"It's either step outside or sit back down and stop worrying," he told Leonard. "There's nothing you can do about this."

Leonard sighed.

"You're right," said Leonard. "See what I mean about not being in control up here."

Leonard was a busy man in 1983. During the year, he served as a color commentator at nearly 30 fights for CBS and four for HBO. He was also an in-studio co-host for HBO's Inside Boxing. The only HBO fight he was absent from was the May 27th middleweight title fight between Marvelous Marvin Hagler and Wilford Scypion. That's because he suffered a hernia which required immediate surgery.

The morning following Leonard's operation, wire stories claimed, "Leonard suffered the hernia while playing basketball." Leonard laughed and told THE RING, "I didn't get the hernia from playing basketball. You guys are getting an exclusive story here.

"The night before the Bob Hope Special, I had gone to rehearsals, as I had a part in the show. After rehearsals, I went home and right to sleep. When I woke up, I had this terrible pain in my lower abdomen. I thought it was a pulled muscle or a cramp. But when I got out of bed, the pain got worse and worse. I was supposed to go over Kenny's (his brother, Kenny Leonard) house. When I got in the car I could hardly drive. By the time I got to his house, I was doubled over. Kenny and his wife took me to the hospital. I figured it was an appendicitis.

"Now I'm in the emergency room and nearly in tears from the pain. I've got this team of doctors and nurses hovering over me. They're not helping me, though. They're asking who the toughest guy was I ever fought, would I like to fight again and if so, against whom. They even lined up for my autograph. Can you believe that? I'm in agony—the worst pain I've ever felt in my life—and they're asking me for my autograph. P.S. They couldn't find anything, so they sent me to another hospital on the other side of town. Kenny drove me there and I saw Dr. Julio Scarzella. He found my problem right away—one of my testicles had twisted, herniating the muscle. He operated, making a small incison on my left side and fixed me up."

Asked why the world was told about a basketball injury, Leonard replied with a laugh, "These are my jewels you're talking about. We thought it would be better to talk about an injury in a basketball game rather than get into a story about my jewels!"

United flight 175 landed in San Francisco, where Leonard and his party of four (Kenny Leonard, pal Joe Brody and administrator Ollie Dunlop) de-planed. It was 1 a.m. in San Francisco, but as far as Leonard was concerned, it was 4 a.m. back home in Maryland. Because of weather-related delays, Leonard had begun this journey—normally 5½–6½ hours including a change in Denver—some 17 hours earlier.

As he stood waiting for his baggage, several travelers approached the weary fighter for his autograph. He was in no mood for them, yet he signed each one, making sure to include his "Happy Face" on the bottom of each. On one of the male autograph seekers, Leonard clamped a playful headlock, touching off laughter in the tired group. Then he sat on the floor next to a shut-down baggage conveyor, lowered his head inside his black fur and close his eyes.

Following his recuperation from hernia surgery, Leonard took a short vacation to the Caribbean with Juanita. Upon returning, they bought a two-year-old, six-bedroom English Tudor in Potomac, Md. They moved in last autumn.

Situated on three acres, it features 200-year-old stained glass and an interior decorated by Juanita. A third member of the Leonard household is Ray Jr.

Four years ago, while his father had become everybody's favorite All-American man, six-year-old "Little Ray" became everybody's favorite All-American child. He was seen with his father at ringside, on talk shows, and on commercials. It was in the 7-Up commercial in which the announcer says, "Hey, isn't that the champ?" referring to Sugar Ray and draws the response, "Naw, that's just my dad!" which melted hearts around the world.

"Little Ray" is now 10 and a "real young man," according to his father.

"He knows more about football than I do," said Ray Sr. He jokingly added, "He knows more about a lot of things than I do." Then, sounding like any proud parent, Leonard said, "Ray is a real good student. Straight A's and B's. Not long ago, he discovered girls and his grades dropped to a C. But now he's got his priorities straight and his grades are back to A's and B's. He knows what's going on. Do you know he's made $200,000 from his work in commercials? Recently, he said to me, 'Hey, dad, I hope you're paying my taxes!' That broke me up."

It was following the 1976 Olympics—in which Leonard won a gold medal as the American light welterweight representative—that worldwide attention first drawn to "Little Ray." Leonard fought in those Games with a photo of his son—born out of wedlock—to his right boxing shoe. Little Ray's mother, Juanita Wilkinson, who was in love with Ray Sr. and had plans to marry him, was forced to slap him with a paternity suit following the Games when her welfare payments came to an end. Needing money to support Juanita, his child and pay for medical bills for his ailing father, Leonard turned pro in 1977. With longtime friend Janks Morton directing him to Washington, D.C. attorney Mike Trainer, Leonard's million-dollar smile was quickly converted into a multi-million dollar bank account. Today, Leonard says his life is as happy and comfortable as he could possibly want it to be.

"As a businessman, I'm in a beautiful position, because I'm calling all the shots concerning my boxing career. I'm not tied to any promoter. I dictate the terms. If they don't like it, that's too bad. I'll go someplace else. I don't need them. They need me. I'm tired of the big promoters using the fighters, treating them as something less than human."

As a family man, Leonard is just as settled and in command, though it has only recently been that way.

"Contrary to public belief, I lacked a lot as a husband and as a father. You gotta work at it, just as you gotta work at anything else. I was away a lot. I had my training, fights, appearances, benefits, commentating and other things. It wasn't easy. Although 'Little Ray' and I are close, we weren't as close as it may have seemed. He's really close to Juanita. Remember, he's been with her all his life. But right now, we're all closer than we've ever been. Juanita is expecting a child this summer. I'd love to have a daughter. But really, I don't care. I just hope for a healthy baby, that's all. 'Little Ray' is excited about having a brother or sister. Ray and I, we talk about everything—sports, sex, life. We've really become involved in one another. Late last year, I told him I was going to box on exhibition. He didn't want me to do it. He said, 'Daddy, I don't want you to do the exhibition. If you do, you'll fight again. I know you.' I guess he does know me."

Three other "members" of Leonard's family are his 1982 Rolls Royce, his recently purchased, $94,000 red Ferrari 512I (ironically called a "Berlinetta Boxer") and Juanita's 1982 Christmas present, an all-black 380 SEL Mercedes.

"I just got the Ferrari back from a shop in New Jersey," said Leonard. "The speed was in kilometers. I never knew if I was going over the speed limit or not, so I had the speedometer changed to something I could understand."

Waiting for the flight from San Francisco to Reno, the autograph-seekers approached Leonard for his signature. One young man, from Oklahoma City, asked a friend of Leonard's, "Will he get mad if I ask to take his picture?" The friend said, with a hunt of teasing in his voice, "I really don't know. Why don't you ask him? The worst that can happen is he'll punch you out and break your camera!" The young man looked at Leonard and saw him smiling at him.

"May I take your picture, Mr. Leonard?"

"Sure!" said Leonard. "Better yet, why don't you have a friend take a picutre of you and I together?"

"REALLY?" squealed the Oklahoma lad.

"Sure, come on over here."

In an instant, the delighted fan was beside Leonard, who put an arm around his young fan's shoulders as a picture was taken.

"Thank you, Mr. Leonard, thank you," said the fan. "Oh, they're never going to believe this back home. Never! Thank you, Mr. Leonard."

"Leonard is back and He's gonna make history, " said trainer Janks Morton, one of the game's top conditioners and a man whose nastiness to those he suspects of trying to use Leonard for any reason makes Mr. T seem tame by comparison.

"I see no way anybody can stand up to Ray," said Morton. "He hasn't lost a bit of his speed, and now he's punching harder than before. If he wasn't unbeatable before, he certainly is now! Ray is gonna re-write the books."

Leonard, of course, agrees.

"It doesn't matter who I fight," he said. "After two or three tuneups, I'll be ready to take back my titles, which have been on loan to Milton McCrory and Donald Curry. I respect both of those guys, but they've had their fun. I'm too strong for either of them. Curry doesn't think I'll be sharp. Wait'll he feels my sharpness. As for McCrory and Kronk, I've already beaten their best man (Thomas Hearns). McCrory had trouble twice with slow, easy-to-hit Colin Jones. I'd chop McCrory right down. I did it to Hearns, So I definitely could do it to McCrory I'm just too strong for him."

Surprisingly, Leonard scoffed at a big-money rematch against Hearns. "As I said before, I'm not in this now for the money. Hearns has never given me credit for beating him. He's been full of excuses. I beat him fair and square. He never hurt me. That's bullshit that it was a premature stoppage. He's lucky he finished on his feet. That right I hit him with just before the end only grazed his chin and yet it staggered him. Had I landed it cleanly, he would've been knocked cold. Hearns is going to have to beg me before I fight him again."

A few of the other names Leonard mentioned as possible opponents were: Marlon Starling, Nino LaRocca, Roberto Duran and Marvelous Marvin Hagler. "Starling and LaRocca would be thinking fights. You can't just walk in and blow these guys away because of their tight defense. But neither one is faster, harder-hitting or shiftier than I am. LaRocca hasn't fought anybody yet. He'd be in over his head against me.

"Duran is the only man who ever had any effect on me. He caught me is the midst of becoming better, at a time when I really didn't know just how good I can be. I was unsure of myself in the first fight against him. I didn't really loosen up until the final few rounds. Had I fought like that all fight, I would have beaten him. Now, I'd know exactly what to hit him with. He's very readable. On top of being a stronger fighter now, I'm also a smarter fighter. In my time away, I've studied boxing and all these guys. I know exactly what it takes to beat each man. I had said I'd never fight Duran again after our second fight in New Orleans. But who ever figured him to come back the way he did? I think he's more than erased his saying 'No Mas!' If he had beaten Hagler, a match between the two of us would have been the biggest thing boxing has ever seen. But next time, I won't just stop him—I'll knock him out!"

As for Hagler, Leonard said, "Let me

make it clear that I never asked Hagler to come down to 154 or 155 pounds. He can fight me at whatever he wants to. I just know I'll weigh around 155. Look at the tough fight Duran gave him. I'm bigger than Duran, taller than Duran, faster than Duran, harder-hitting than Duran—everything! Hagler is great, mind you, but I have all the tools to nullify him. I'll beat him . Right after the Hagler-Duran fight, Duran came over to me and said, 'You'd knock him out.' I know I would. In his mind, Hagler knows it also."

A deep purple limousine was waiting for Leonard when he arrived in Reno. So was big James Anderson, Leonard's Chief of Security. Anderson, cut out of the Janks Morton, no-nonsense mold, was needed that night in the Lawlor Events Center following the stoppage of the Ray Mancini-Bobby Chacon title bout, when angry Chacon fans exploded. Most yelled, cussed and booed. A few of them threw things. One of the thrown objects hit Ollie Dunlop, sitting behind Leonard, on top of his head, cutting him and knocking him dazed to the floor.

Quickly grabbing a folding metal chair, Anderson closed it and held it up as a shield as Leonard and fellow HBO commentator Barry Tompkins took shelter under the press table.

Following the fight, Anderson and a bleeding but recovered Dunlop rushed Leonard out of the building and into their waiting limousine.

"Another dull night, huh Ollie?" joked Leonard.

They laughed and headed back to their hotel, where Leonard was to be interviewed by people magazine.

As Leonard walked through the lobby of the MGM, fans and autograph hounds converged on him from every angle. Anderson and Dunlop kept him moving through the crowd toward the elevators.

Standing off the the side was a husband and wife, from Hollywood, Florida, who admitted to being "past retirement age."

"He smiled at us at breakfast," said the woman about Leonard. "We then went over and asked for his autograph for our grandson. He asked us to sit down and have some coffee with him. He reminds us of Joe Louis. Everybody loved Louis."

Since winning the gold medal in Montreal nearly eight years ago, Sugar Ray Leonard has become perhaps the most recognizable face in sports. He has easily become the most beloved.

"Ray Leonard is home cookin', and everybody loves home cookin'," Angelo Dundee is fond of saying.

Sugar Ray Leonard has returned in search of greatness. Some believe he is foolish, saying his accomplishments have already put him on a pedestal of greatness, and, if anything, all he is doing is jeopardizing his position by returning to action after two years of inactivity.

Others claim it's crazy for him to return after having such delicate surgery on his eye. CBS-TV recently pointed to the case of former Olympic gold medalist Ray Seales, who is all but blind from injuries sustained in boxing.

"It's not fair to compare my case with Seales," said Leonard. "Unfortunately for Seales, he didn't have his eyes taken care of when he knew they needed attention. He was dreaming of his title shot which never came. I stopped fighting as soon as I realized something was wrong and had the problem corrected. Seales didn't do that. Also, I'm not merely jumping right back into boxing without consultation. I've been thoroughly checked over and given a green light to resume my career. Also, I believe I can add to boxing. I can help the sport grow by pushing the thumbless gloves. It's about time they were used. There are just too many fighters having their careers cut short because of errant thumbs."

Sugar Ray Leonard will not come close to the 145 career knockouts of Archie Moore or to Willie Pep's 242 career bouts or to Joe Louis's 25 title defenses or to the incredible record of Sugar Ray Robinson. Those figures will never be achieved again.

Only time will tell where Sugar Ray Leonard's place is among the greatest of the greats. But for now, with this brilliant star once again in our midst, we can all wear the symbol of that star—a glowing, happy face.

ALMOST 20 YEARS AGO, ANOTHER great "Sugar Ray" made a comeback. He was Ray Robinson, the original "Sugar Ray."

Robinson had announced his retirement from boxing as world middleweight champion on December 18, 1952, almost six months after being stopped by Joey Maxim in a bid for the light heavy crown. Twenty-two months later, on October 20, 1954, the 33-year-old Ray announced his return to the ring. He then boxed a six-round exhibition with Gene Burton on November 29 and scored a six-round kayo over Joe Rindone in Detroit in his first comeback fight.

The next five years saw Sugar Ray Robinson win and lose the world middleweight title three times. Ray knocked out Carl (Bobo) Olson for the crown on December 9, 1955, lost it to Gene Fullmer on January 2, 1957, regained it from Fullmer with a "perfect punch" knockout in Chicago on May 1, 1957, lost it again to Carmen Basilio on September 23, 1957, regained it from the Onion Farmer on March 25, 1958, and lost it, for the last time, to Paul Pender on January 22, 1960. Sugar Ray was almost 40 when he engaged in his last title bout—a unanimous decision loss to NBA champ Fullmer on March 4, 1961—and he was over 44 when he had his last fight—a unanimous verdict loss to world contender Joey Archer on November 10, 1965.

Comparisons with Ray Leonard are obvious. Leonard was only 26 when he announced his retirement as undefeated world welterweight champion on November 9, 1982, and only 27 when he announced his comeback following two exhibitions on December 10, 1983. He'll be about three months shy of his 28th birthday when he faces Kevin Howard in his first comeback fight in February.

Before his 1982-83 "retirement," Leonard had engaged in 33 pro fights, compiling a 32-1 log after a long (145-5 with 75 kayoes) amateur career that began in 1972.

Robinson started boxing as an amateur featherweight in 1939 and scored 69 kayoes (40 in the first round) in 85 simon pure bouts before turning pro in October, 1940. Through 1952, when he "retired," Robinson had 136 pro fights, winning 130, losing three, boxing two draws, and having had one bout declared "no contest." From his "return" in 1955 until his retirement more than 10 years later, Ray fought an additional 66 contests, winning 44, losing 16, drawing four, and having one more bout declared "no contest."

Based on these statistics, how will Sugar Ray Leonard do on his comeback? Both Robinson and Leonard sparkled in their amateur and early pro careers, but Robinson was obviously not the same fighter when he made his comeback.

The prognosis is that Leonard will lose some bouts on his comeback, but that he will win some more world titles.

When he does, The Ring will be there to report them!

RING'S TOP TEN GLASS JAWED FIGHTER OF ALL TIME

BY MICHAEL SILVER

A GLASS JAW IS PERHAPS THE worst handicap a professional fighter can carry into the ring with him. It is a severe pugilistic shortcoming because it exposes the fighter to a sudden and dramatic defeat at any time during a bout. Many fighters have overcome brittle hands, thin skin, or a short reach and have achieved success in the ring. Some have even attained greatness. But very few boxers cursed with a weak mandible have been able to attain success, let alone greatness. Nevertheless, a small number of talented pugs did beat the odds and were able to rise to the top (or very close to it) of their profession.

Before these unusual gladiators are mentioned by name let us examine what is meant by a "glass jaw". Of course any fighter, no matter how strong, can be knocked out or floored if hit hard enough with an unseen punch (see Sonny Liston vs. Leotis Martin, Rocky Marciano vs. Jersey Joe Walcott and Archie Moore, Gene Fullmer vs. Sugar Ray Robinson). It is the fighter who goes down or is knocked out in a pattern inconsistent with everyday ring behavior which interests us here. The true glass jawed fighters fall into several categories. On one extreme we have the fighter who cannot take any kind of punch at all. These poor fellows are usually put into a stupor during the ring instructions. Needless to say the careers of these fragile fist fighters are short lived and they are quickly and quietly ushered into another line of work.

The next step up finds a somewhat more rugged individual. He is able to withstand the normal wear and tear of ring combat but is put in dire distress by any solid punch to the whiskers. The punch will either send him abruptly to the floor or cause his legs to do an impromptu Irish jig. Most of our glass jawed fighters fall into this category.

There is one other classification and it concerns otherwise strong-chinned fighters who display a curious aversion to punch only on certain occasions against specific opponents. These reluctant warriors have been villified for their lack of . . . uh . . . shall we say, desire. Or, if you prefer, the Latin; 'Mandibillus Canine".

Each of the fighters mentioned below falls into one of these three categories. Every one of them achieved great success in the ring despite having a glass jaw. All have earned the coveted right to be placed among boxing's top ten glass jawed fighters of all time.

1. FLOYD PATTERSON

WITHOUT QUESTION THE LENOX CHINA OF glass jaws. Floyd was dropped a total of 18 times during his career. He was up and down so many times that "Spalding", the rubber ball company, wanted to advertise on his trunks. Perhaps the real problem with Floyd was that he was never more than an overstuffed light heavyweight. When he won the vacant heavyweight championship by beating Archie Moore in 1956, Patterson weighed only 182 lbs. Over the years he increased his poundage, but his ability to take a punch never did improve. Yet, in spite of his frequent visits to the canvas, Floyd, to his everlasting credit, took the full count on only two occasions. Although stopped by Ingemar Johansson and Muhammad Ali (TKO's), only the aforementioned Sonny Liston was able to keep him down. Floyd did indeed have a glass chin, but no one ever accused him of having a glass heart.

2. BOB SATTERFIELD

IF BOB SATTERFIELD WERE FIGHTING TODAY he would be a millionaire. Back in the fabulous fifties he was one of the game's most exciting performers. The reason was simple; he either knocked his opponent silly or got flattened himself. There was never a dull moment when Bob Satterfield graced a main event. A talented and terrific punching heavyweight who seldom weighed more than 183 lbs., Bob crossed gloves with the best fighters his era had to offer. The results were wild, to say the least. Satterfield kayoed Cleveland Williams, Paul Andrews, Bob Baker and decisioned Nino Valdez, Julio Mederos, and Johnny Summerlin. He, in turn, was blasted out by Ezzard Charles, Jake LaMotta, Harold Johnson (whom he previously defeated), Archie Moore and Rex Layne, among others. In all, Satterfield was kayoed 13 times.

The trouble with Satterfield was that in going for the quick KO—which was just about every time—he exposed his own none-too-rugged chin to the opposition. It was generally a case of who was faster on the draw. Thirty-four of Satterfield's 51 career victories were won by knockout.

Throughout Bob Satterfield's roller coaster career there was really only one consistent winner; the fans who were fortunate enough to watch him in action!

3. RUBY GOLDSTEIN

MOST OF US REMEMBER RUBY AS AMERICA'S premier boxing referee during the late 1940's and 50's. But oldtimers will tell you that Ruby Goldstein was one of the greatest naturally talented fighters they ever saw. Back in the mid 1920's, the "Jewel of the Ghetto" was an 18-year-old, 135-pound phenomenon who won his first 23 fights in a row, scoring 13 knockouts. Ruby was the toast of New York's Lower East Side and on the verge of a title fight when he was matched against a little known brawler out of Omaha, Nebraska, named Ace Hudkins. Ruby's fans packed the Coney Island Arena expecting their hero, who was a 4 to 1 favorite, to score another quick knockout. The bout was only a few seconds old when Ruby, true to his reputation, dropped Ace flat onto his back with a smashing right to the jaw. Ace seemed dead to the world and the referee's count appeared to be a mere formality. But as Ruby walked around the ring and waved to his admirers, something very strange was taking place. Hudkins, incredibly, slowly began to drag himself off the canvas. Using the ropes to help his ascent, he clawed his way to the top strand and at the count of 9 was standing up and ready to resume the fight. Not only did he appear to be fully recovered but there was a strange maniacal look in his eye. The sight seemed to demoralize Ruby. How else to explain his subsequent one sided beating at the hands of the crude Hudkins? Ruby was counted out in the 4th round, showing not one iota of Hudkins' fighting spirit.

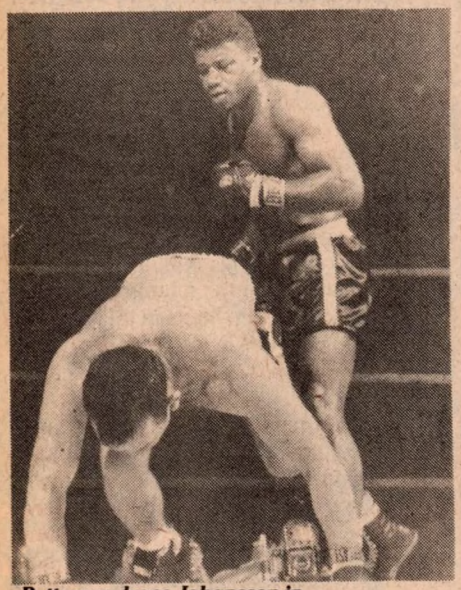
For Ace Hudkins, aptly nicknamed the "Nebraska Wildcat", it was the beginning of a brilliant career. For young Ruby, it was the beginning of the end. He was never the same after that beating. In between announcing retirements, Ruby would win a number of bouts only to lose the big one by a knockout. Occasionally he would display flashes of his old brilliance, but he was never able to live up to his full promise. Ruby's record speaks for itself; out of a total of 55 fights he won 50 and lost only five. All of his losses were by knockout.



Patterson drops Johansson in "Battle of the China Chins."

4. INGEMAR JOHANSSON

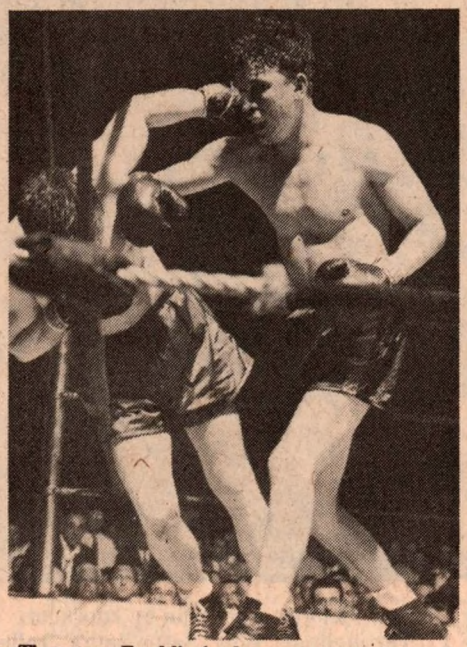
WHEN INGEMAR JOHANSSON FOUGHT FLOYD Patterson in their rubber match in 1961, reporters referred to the contest as "The Battle of the China Chins". The first round saw Patterson decked twice and Johansson once. Over the next five rounds it was anybody's fight as both men took turns staggering one another in a wild and sloppy fight. Patterson finally ended matters with a right hook to the back of Johansson's head in the 6th round.

Ingemar Johansson didn't always have a glass head. He belongs to that class of pugilist who after having suffered a particularly severe knockout defeat is never again able to withstand a solid punch to the beezer. (Whether the reasons for this are psychological, physical or a combination of both have yet to be determined).

Johansson's trouble started the night he lost the heavyweight crown back to Floyd Patterson on a fifth round knockout. Actually, "knockout" is not really a sufficient description of Johansson's loss. He was, quite simply, devastated. A Patterson left hook which started somewhere in Hoboken nearly decapitated him. Johansson was knocked completely unconscious for over five minutes and was in a daze for hours afterwards.

The colorful Swede fought only five more times after that crushing defeat. It soon became apparent that Johansson was no longer able to take a punch. In his second comeback fight, he was knocked flat on his back by Holland's Wim Snoek. He barely beat the count before flattening Snoek in the fifth round. On April 21, 1963, he was unceremoniously dumped in the last round of a 12-round fight by none other than Brian London. Luckily for Johansson the fight took place in Stockholm, Sweden where a generous local referee (long count) and timekeeper (the round was shortened after Johansson arose on unsteady legs) helped to save Ingo from a most embarrassing defeat.

That near knockout at the hands of an ordinary heavyweight convinced Johansson that the game was over. At the age of 30 he wisely decided to hang up his gloves.



Tippy tops Freddie Archer.

5. TIPPY LARKIN

TO SAY THAT TIPPY LARKIN KNEW HOW TO fight is a gross understatement. The Garfield, New Jersey, 140 pounder was a ballet master with boxing gloves. In 1946, he won recognition as Junior Welterweight champion after beating Willie Joyce. His scientific boxing style more than compensated for a weak chin. You had to be an outstanding fighter in your own right (and more than a little bit lucky) to catch Larkin with a solid punch. Lew Jenkins, Al Davis, Beau Jack, Henry Armstrong, Charley Fusari, Ike Williams, and Bernard Docusen all had one thing in common—they kayoed Tippy Larkin. During Larkin's 17 year career and 151 fights (including 57 KO victories) the boxing master was outpointed only three times. His 10 other losses were all by knockout.

6. "PHAINTING" PHIL SCOTT

BRITISH FIGHT FANS ARE STILL TRYING TO live down the legacy of "Phainting" Phil Scott. Scott was given his nickname by stateside fight fans who mostly remember him in a reclining position. In part, this is a bum rap. At 6′ 3″ and 215 lbs. Scott was a pretty decent fighter who, back in the late 1920's, was considered a serious challenger for the heavyweight championship. In a match against leading contender Jack Sharkey, he fell down in the third round after Sharkey placed several lefts and rights on or about his mid section. Clutching his groin, Scott protested that he had been fouled and could not continue. The ref did not agree and counted him out. If this were an isolated incident it would not even bear mentioning because Sharkey was known to be reckless at times with his body punches. Unfortunately it was not an isolated incident. Indeed, Scott claimed foul in so many fights that he may have had a glass groin. These were the days before the "No Foul Rule"—which forbids a fighter to win by claiming a low blow—went into effect. So, on many occasions throughout the roaring 20's and into the depressing 30's, when the going got tough. . . the not so tough cried foul.

7. JOHN TATE

A TRULY CLASSIC CASE OF THE GLASS JAW syndrome. Big John, after representing America in the 1976 Olympics, looked like the real goods. The first inkling that something might be wrong came when Cuba's Teofilo Stevenson knocked him out with one punch in their semi-final match at the Montreal Olympics. Still, John was only an amateur with limited experience so the experts were willing to give him the benefit of the doubt.

All went well for John over the next three years. In fact, things went so well that Tate won the WBA version of the heavyweight championship by beating Gerrie Coetzee in 1979. Then, with the suddenness of a thunderbolt, the roof caved in. Tate, who happens to be a very fine boxer, was on his way to victory over Mike Weaver when, with 40 seconds left to go in their 15-round fight, Weaver brought up a left hook that landed squarely on Tate's jaw. Timber! Big John was unconscious before he hit the canvas. Weaver had never before (and hasn't since) knocked out an opponent with one punch. The secret was now out; hit John Tate on the button and out he goes. The diagnosis of the glass jaw was confirmed three months later when Canada's Trevor Berbick, on the losing end for seven rounds, suddenly caught Tate with a right and abruptly ended their fight.

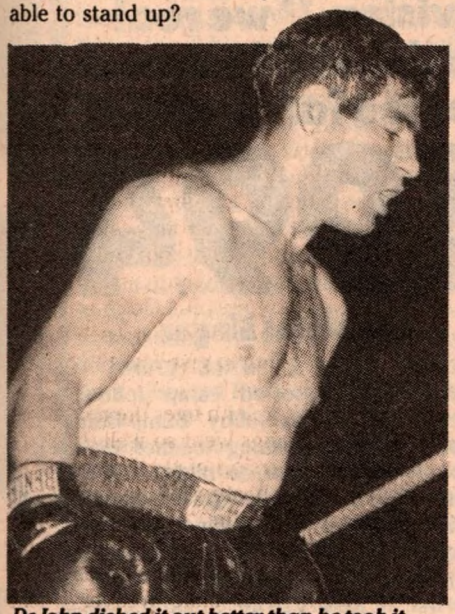
Today, John Tate continues his career fighting an assortment of tomato cans in backwoods arenas. Tate's dented mandible is expected to be dented ever further early this spring, when he is scheduled to face heavyweight king Larry Holmes. In 1979, Tate's chances against Holmes would have been considered pretty good. Today, the only question is how many rounds will he be able to stand up?



DeJohn dished it out better than he took it.

8. JOEY DeJOHN

THE NAME DeJOHN SHOULD RING A BELL (pun intended) with any dyed in the wool fight buff over the age of 40. The fighting DeJohn brothers—Ralph, Carmen, Joey and Mike—were an exciting addition to the boxing scene for over 20 years. But it was brother Joey who was the most feared of the brood. Oh, how he could punch! Joey, who fought as a middleweight, knocked out 51 opponents; an accomplishment made even more impressive when one considers that he fought in boxing's toughest division during the talent-filled 1940's and 50's. Ossie Harris, Herbie Kronowitz, Reuben Jones, Bob Murphy, Don Lee, Indian Gomez, Tony Demico and Hurley Sanders all fell beneath DeJohn's pounding fists. There are fans who still talk about his great Madison Square Garden slugfest with Pete Mead back in 1949. DeJohn, after dropping Mead twice in the fourth round, was about to deliver the coup de grace when he was caught with a desperation punch and was knocked cold in the 5th round. And that, really, was the flaw in Joey DeJohn's armor. He just didn't have the chin to go along with the rest of his formidable fistic equipment. In all, DeJohn was kayoed 10 times before calling it quits in 1955, much to the relief of the entire middleweight division.

Norton stood up to Holmes.

9. KEN NORTON

KEN NORTON HAD WHAT COULD BE CALLED a selective glass jaw. The same fighter who could stand up to the heavy guns of Larry Holmes, Muhammad Ali (three times) and Jerry Quarry, utterly fell apart when faced with a fighter whose reputation as an awesome puncher preceded his entry into the ring. It wasn't just that Norton lost by KO to Earnie Shavers, George Foreman, and Gerry Cooney—all of whom could knock down buildings with their Sunday punches —it was the consistent way in which he lost to them. Norton had the experience, tools and natural ability to stand up to, or at least make a better showing, against all three opponents. Nevertheless, in each bout he suffered an almost identical quick KO loss. Negative thinking? Perhaps. On the other hand, scientists have yet to discover a nerve that fight fans have known about for a long time; it is the nerve that travels directly from a fighter's chin to his heart.

10. PRIMO CARNERA

HUGE 6′ 6″ 270 LB. PRIMO CARNERA WAS brought to the U. S. during the Depression. The American public soon became fascinated with this 1930's version of the Incredible Hulk. The mob guys who owned the former circus strongman built his awesome reputation as a superman with one fixed fight after another. Unfortunately for Carnera, his title match with Max Baer was on the level. The hapless hulk was bounced off the canvas 11 times before the referee stopped the mismatch and made Primo an ex-champion.

The Baer fight burst the bubble of Carnera's phony invincibility. Fixed fights were now out of the question, so Primo had to rely on his somewhat limited boxing skills to win. Used as a sacrificial lamb against a young Joe Louis, the Ambling Alp was brutally battered into submission in six rounds. In his last two bouts in this country, he was kayoed twice in less than two weeks by Leroy Haynes, a murderous-hitting heavyweight.

Da Preem's reputation as a glass chinned fighter is primarily based on those four kayo losses. Yet the fact remains that very few, if any, humans could stand up to the full force of a Baer or Louis punch. And Carnera, although dropped numerous times by both men, was never actually counted out. So how, it is argued, can he be accused of having a glass jaw? How? Well, the very fact that Primo was floored so many times actually proves that he couldn't take a punch. A stronger chinned fighter would have stood up under the first good punch, been dazed, and then taken out completely with a followup barrage. Carnera always went down after being hit with the first solid punch. This caused him to be floored for a short count many times, thereby denying Louis and Baer the opportunity to put over the finisher.

Let it not go unsaid that without Primo's great heart he would not have continued to drag himself off the canvas time after time. Most fighters would have gladly stayed down after being tagged on the button by either Louis or Baer.

So, there they are—the best soft-chinned fighters who ever lived. You can be sure none of them ever would have had as their personal favorite song, Pat Benatar's early 1980's smash, "Hit Me With Your Best Shot." □

When we received a press release from a major television network informing us that a fighter in an upcoming TV bout was "rated number 8 in the world by the International Boxing Federation in the super middleweight division," we realized that this story is not too far-fetched.

By Charles Singer

LINCOLN, NEB.: A SMALL CROWD OF reporters and assorted camp followers watched with awe as Bobby "Bump Bump" Beastly put the finishing touches on his preparations for tomorrow night's title bout against Wild and Wonderful Willy Slavin. If he is successful in wresting the Potato Weight crown (World Boxing Bunch version) from Slavin, he will become only the sixth man in history to have held championships in eleven different weight classes and the third to have held all eleven simultaneously.

Although Beastly is a heavy favorite, interest in the fight runs high in boxing circles due to the air of mystery surrounding Slavin. Little is known about Slavin's ability to punch or take punishment as this will be the first time he steps inside a ring, Slavin having won his title last week as third prize in a Publishers' Clearing House contest. Even Slavin's share of the purse became a matter of controversy yesterday when his manager disputed promoter Ron Rex's statement that the fighter had a two million dollar guarantee, contending the contract promised only car fare and an introduction to the round-card girl of Slavin's choice.

On the other hand, Beastly's prowess inside the squared circle has been proven beyond doubt. After almost winning his semifinal bout in the Chicago Golden Gloves he was lured away from the amateur ranks with a lucrative multifight television contract. In his first pro fight he won the World Boxing Machine Senior Destroyer Weight title, followed by the World Boxing Axis Senior Super Destroyer Weight title and then the World Boxing Empire Senior Super Duper Destroyer Weight title. Keeping his promise to be an active champion, Beastly went on to add the Atomic Weight, Paper Weight, Penny Weight, Counter Weight, Sash Weight, Net Weight and Ten-Minute-Wait-For-a-Table crowns to his collection over the next two years. His manager Jon Rex, son of promoter Ron Rex, brushes aside criticism that Beastly has never defended any of his titles by pointing out he has been much too busy winning new ones.

There was a minor confrontation this afternoon between Rex and Ibar Adolph Slugger, editor-publisher of The Bell–"The Koran of Boxing." Slugger, looking wan and haggard beneath his ever present kaffiyeh, undoubtedly due to the ordeal of covering 26 championship fights over the past ten days, disputed Rex's claim that Beastly was "three and a third times the fighter Neil Armstrong was in his best days." "First of all Neil Armstrong walked on the moon," retorted Slugger, "It was Henry Armstrong that was the fighter, and while Armstrong's three titles spanned a 21-pound weight differential, Beastly's eleven cover six pounds, ten ounces. It should also be noted that there are sixteen other claimants for each of Beastly's titles. We used to be able to print the Bell Ratings on two pages in the center of the magazine. Now it takes a separate supplement and needs half a Georgia pine forest to provide the paper."

This reporter must admit that Slugger has a point: with seventeen official sanctioning bodies, boxing has more acronyms than the defense departmet and twice the budget. It would seem inevitable that there be some thinning of talent when there are 46 weight classes and 782 champions.

"Not necessarily," counters Von Rex, president of eight of those sanctioning bodies (WBD through K). "Just as the designated hitter rule in baseball kept greats like Henry Aaron in the game for extra years, the added opportunities in boxing enrich our sport for the spectator. Why, without the new divisions Archie Moore would never have come out of retirement, Charley Burley wouldn't have the title he so long deserved and Billy Graham would still be known as the 'Uncrowned Welterweight King.' My only regret is that Sam Langford is dead."

Tomorrow's fight will be held in the lounge of The Silver Horseshoe Casino here in Lincoln and will be fought under the auspices of the Lancaster County Boxing Board with WBB Championship Rules applying: four one-minute rounds with three-minute intermissions for commercials; standing eight-count, sitting twelve-count and lying no account; scoring on the five-point maybe system with the three judges names kept secret, no vote for the referee and four votes for WBB Commissioner Non Rex (brother of Ron, uncle of Jon, cousin of Von and nephew of Lon).

RINGSIDE REPORTS

FIGHTER OF THE MONTH

Koji Kobayashi and Don Lee

Koji Kobayashi and Don Lee are the co-Fighters of the Month. Lee earned his distinction with an upset eighth-round stoppage of world-ranked middleweight contender Tony Sibson, while Kobayashi gained the honor by winning the WBC flyweight title with a stunning two-round TKO over defending champion Frank Cedeno.

Kobayashi, the second son of a baker, was born in Tokyo's Katsushika Ward on August 27, 1957. A skinny kid who loved to play with cats, Koji's original ambition was to be a designer. While attending art school, he joined the Tanabe Club to build up his physique. The club had a body building center downstairs and a boxing gym upstairs Koji went upstairs by mistake, and became a fighter.

After a brief (3-1) amateur career, Kobayashi joined the newly built Kadoebi Club and turned professional by stopping Ryutaro Okayama in three rounds on December 12, 1979. He won the East-Japan Shinjin-o (Novice King) tournament, but was knocked out in the first round by Jiro Watanabe in the national finals. Watanabe is the current WBA junior bantam champ.

Koji went on to defeat the likes of Facumron Vibulchai, Jiro Takada, Phaktai Osodsapha, Filipino champion Flash Jagdon, Korean title hilder Chong-Chul Park, Chan-Soo Chung, and Lord Mitsuru before his fight with Cedeno. Kobayashi's overall record is now 21-1-3 with 14 kayoes.

Don Lee, the 6′2″ middleweight from Gary, Indiana, won three AAU titles and the 1981 National Golden Gloves championship in compiling a 104-6 mark as an amateur. Don made his pro debut by stopping Billy Evans in one round on June 13, 1981, and rattled off 11 more straight knockouts before meeting the highly regarded LeRoy Hester in Tampa, Florida on October 24, 1982. Hester was then 11-0, but the hard punching Lee stopped him in the eighth session.

Lee, a southpaw, was knocked out in the first round by Artie McCloud in Chicago in his next fight. Some were quick to label him a "weak chin," but Dangerous Don rebounded with a 6-0-1 mark in 1983. The draw came against Guy Kennedy in Tampa on July 3—Don's first nationally televised contest.

Lee's overall record is now 20-1-1; all his victories have been by knockout.

It was a bad day for highly-rated Tony Sibson (above and opposite page) as Don Lee stopped him in round eight. The victory made Don Lee The Ring's Fighter Of The Month.

LEE-SIBSON

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J.—In one of those unbelievably exciting fights that almost looked like it was being staged for Hollywood, Don Lee, unranked and virtually unknown, stopped Tony Sibson at 2:13 of the eighth round in a scheduled 10-rounder at the Sands. Lee's spectacular victory has to be considered an upset of major proportions. Sibson was ranked number two in the world by The Ring's International Rating Panel and was coming off an impressive knockout over John Collins, but Lee outslugged him in a see-saw punchout that featured no less than six knockdowns.

Though he came into the bout with a 19-1-1 (19 knockouts) record, many felt that Lee would be easy pickings for the hard punching Brit. In his lone network showing prior to the Sibson fight, "Dangerous Don" struggled to hold ordinary Guy Kennedy to a draw. But the moment both fighters entered the ring, Lee's striking height advantage (6-foot-2, compared to Tony's 5-foot-8) was apparent.

Sibson, 163, opened in his typically aggressive fashion, crowding Lee as he bobbed and weaved his way inside. With the round drawing to a close, Sibson caught Lee with a nice left uppercut and Don went down. Although the bell rang before Sibson could follow up, things seemed to be going pretty much as expected.

The switch-hitting Lee came out lefthanded in the second and enjoyed much better success. He landed a number of clean blows. Then Sibson connected with another hard left in the closing seconds that jarred Lee and evened the session.

All hell broke loose in the third. Sibson was on the attack when Lee nailed him with a beautiful left hook out of his southpaw stance. The force of the punch sent Tony flying to the canvas as if he'd been hit by a shotgun blast. He scrambled quickly to his feet and foolishly charged back into the fray. Lee was waiting with another left hook and before you could say: "God Save The Queen," England's pride and joy was on his arse again.

Following another eight-count, Lee resumed his offensive, punching the dazed Sibson halfway through the ropes with another flurry. At this point, referee Tony Perez could have stopped the fight, but the three knockdown rule was not in effect and brave Tony beat the count and managed to survive until the bell.

Sibson, showing more courage than common sense, mounted a spirited counter attack in the fourth, winning the round. Lee seemed to be coasting, but in the fifth he opened up again, gashing Tony over the left eye. Although the cut was deep, it only served to spur "Sibbo" on.

The crowd was in an uproar during the sixth and seventh. Lee seemed to be tiring a bit and Tony had his left hook working again. Going into the fatal eighth, the fight was still up for grabs, especially under New Jersey's system of scoring fights on a rounds basis.

The momentum seemed to be going in Sibson's favor and he bounded out for the eighth, dumping Lee with a right to the head for a flash knockdown. Don jumped up unhurt and immediately showed everybody just how "Dangerous" he can be. He met Sibson's charge with a vicious left hook and Tony went down—hard!

Sibson gathered himself up and rose at the count of eight. At the count of nine, he leaned back into the ropes and referee Perez stopped the fight.

"I was looking for the ropes. I was looking for support. I was going to sit on the middle rope and rock and roll all night," claimed Sibson. He'd taken quite a beating, however, and Perez's move was more than justified. Sibson's loss to Marvelous Marvin Hagler was a picnic by comparison.

"My world feels shattered," said the crestfallen Sibson. "The cut altered my tactics. I was desperate. I was thinking of the eye and wanted to get it over with. I just walked into one. It was the oldest trick on the book. But this is life. One day you're a king. The next day you're not."

For Lee, it was a tremendous victory. His chin is a tad suspect (Art McCloud starched him in one for his only loss), but he's tall, a decent boxer, and can punch with the best. Just ask Tony Sibson.

British junior welterweight champion Clinton McKenzie, 140¼, TKO'd Sammy Young, 141½, Troy, NY, at 0:50 of the seventh round in a scheduled 10. Southpaw McKenzie applied steady pressure, and wore the game Young down to a point where referee Vincent Rainone had no choice but to step in. The brisk action earned a nice round of applause.

Duke McKenzie, 115¼, London, was very lucky to receive a majority decision over David Capo, 116½, New York, four. Duke (Clinton's brother) remains unbeaten at 8-0, six knockouts. Referee, Rainone.

Vaughn Hooks, 173½, Phila., won a unanimous decision over Jimmy Allen, 174, Bridgeport, Conn., six. Referee, Perez.

Delyn Parsley, 250, Brooklyn, won a unanimous decision over Ernie Singleton, 236, Willingboro, N.J., six. This one was strictly for laughs. Referee, Perez.

The main event was televised live over NBC-TV.

KOBAYASHI-CEDENO WBC Flyweight Title

TOKYO, JAPAN—Lanky Koji Kobayashi, 112, won the WBC flyweight title with an upset stoppage over fellow southpaw Frank Cedeno, also 112, Philippines, at 1:48 of round two in a scheduled 12 at Korakuen Hall. Cedeno thus became the fifth WBC flyweight champion in a row to lose the crown in his first defense.

The 5′8″ Kobayashi had a four and a half inch height advantage over Cedeno, but the Filipino managed to outjab him in round one. Japanese experts were afraid that making 112 pounds would weaken Kobayashi, who had been ranked sixth among the junior bantams by the WBC. Many thought the fight would be a mismatch, and that first round indicated they were right.

Kobayashi's corner told him to circle to his right in the next session, and the 27-year-old challenger obeyed. As the champ came forward with his right jab, Koji caught him on the jaw with a left cross. Frank's legs buckled. At 0:49 of the session, Kobayashi stepped in and nailed Cedeno with an overhand left to the face, and down he went! The champ pulled himself up, seemingly amazed, but Koji nailed him on the ropes and landed a left to the jaw. Frank went down again, landing on his back near a neutral corner. He rose again, but Kobayashi was all over him, and a chopping left put Cedeno on the seat of his trunks. Some of the spectators yelled "Knockout," but the three-knockdown rule is not in effect in WBC title bouts.

A wobbly Cedeno barely beat the count, and Kobayashi resumed his attack. A fusillade of one-twos forced the champion to hold on to the ropes with his left mauler. Cedeno was helpless, and referee Lou Filipo stopped the contest.

(Rudy Ortega had been scheduled to referee, but failed to arrive in Tokyo on time. Filipo, one of the three judges, subbed.)

The new champ, Koji, ran to a neutral corner, jumped up on the ropes, and yelled, "I did it." the capacity crowd of 3,500 gave him a standing ovation.

"It's like a dream," said Kobayashi, "If it is a dream, I don't want to wake up. I'm very ha;;y."

Cedeno knows no language except Tagalog, but his manager, Jesse Abrea, speaks English. This reported served as in interpreter in the dazed loser's dressing room.

"Cedeno became overconfident and careless after the first round," said Abrea gloomily. "Kobayashi caught him with the left hand in round two."

The ex-champ's only comment was "Straight left... strong."

The WBC has ordered Kobayashi to defend his title against perennial top contender Gabriel Bernal of Mexico within 60 days. Kobayashi will try to beat the WBC flyweight title jinx, but Bernal is much tougher than Cedeno.

Southpaw Gen Tosa, 134, won an upset unanimous decision over Takao (Tenyu) Maruki, 134¼, the JBC's top ranked junior lightweight, 10. Scoring: referee Hiroyuki Tezaki, 97-95; judge Takeshi Shimakawa, 100-97; judge Takeo Ugo, 99-96.

Masaji Fujiwara, 136¼, outscored Kenjiro Kawai, 135¼, eight.

Shotgun Suzuki, 117, kayoed Shiji Maeda, 118, in 2:59 of the sixth and final round.

Four-rounders: Shunji Ueno, 112, halted Yusuke Matsumura, also 112, at 1:47 of the second. Takahiro Oda, 122, outpointed former kick boxing champion Takashi Okubo, also 122.

Purses—Cedeno, $150,000; Kobayashi, $10,000.

WBC witness—Ariosto Manrique (Mexico).

BUMPHUS-GARCIA WBA Junior Welterweight Title

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J.—In boxing's latest monument to mediocrity, Johnny (Bump City) Bumphus won the vacant WBA junior welterweight title with a unanimous 15 round decision over Argentina's Lorenzo Garcia. The bout, televised live over NBC-TV, becamse necessary when Aaron Pryor "retired" rather than accept a meager $400,000 purse to defend his belt against Bumphus, his mandatory challenger. Whether or not Bumphus is to be anything more than an "interim" champion remains to be seen. It is already obvious, however, that Pryor's brand of mayhem will be sorely missed. While the left-handed Bumphus is a gifted technician, he has about as much pizzazz as flat beer.

Bumphus and Garcia made an improbable Mutt-n-Jeff pairing. The way the lean-and-lanky Bumphus towered over Garcia, it was hard to envision any type of competitive action. And for the first three rounds there was none. Bumphus was unable to find his elusive adversary with his southpaw jabs, and Lorenzo was content to stay out of trouble, smiling every time Johnny missed.

By the fourth round, the passive nature of the encounter had lured practically everybody inside the Sands' Copa Room to sleep—including Bumphus. Then, Garcia suddenly lashed out with a short right to the point of Bumphus' chin that woke the crowd up and shook Bumphus to the core. Johnny wavered for a split second before his legs gave out and he sank to the floor. Although stunned, he merely brushed the canvas and immediately jumped to his feet.

Johnny Bumphus and manager Lou Duva jump for joy after it was announced that Bumphus had won a 15-round unanimous decision against Lorenzo Garcia.

"I threw a lazy jab," said Bumphus. "He rocked back a little and caught me with the right. I was off balance. I've been hit harder before and didn't go down."

Garcia made a half-hearted attempt to cash in on the situation, but at the round-ending bell, Bumphus was punching back in flurries.

Bumphus, his respect for Garcia renewed, picked up his work rate in the fifth and proceeded to sweep the next five rounds. His light, yet frequent, combinations bloodied Lorenzo's nose and piled up points.

In the ninth, they engaged in a lively exchange, and while both landed, Bumphus held the edge. It was still no donnybrook, but the pace was intensifying.

Garcia, 139¼, came back slightly in the 10th, getting off first throughout the round. He continued his rally into the opening moments of the 11th, jarring Bumphus with another straight right. Bumphus quickly returned the compliment and they slugged it out for the remainder of the round.

Both came out winging in the 12th. Bumphus, 139, got the better of several exchanges, though his combinations lacked steam and he seemed to be running low on gas.

"I started to feel a little weary in the 11th," admitted Johnny. "They (his cornermen) told me it was close. That's when I bit down and got my second wind."

Garcia tried to take advantage of fatigue and turned aggressor in the 13th and 14th rounds. By then, however, he had little left himself and couldn't muster the power to inflict any serious damage.

Bumphus dug deep down into his reserve tank in the final round, and despite getting jolted by a jab, managed to close well enough to take the decision by scores of 146-143 (Carlos Berrocal, Panama) and 144-142 (twice) from Cesar Ramos, Puerto Rico and Royji Kashiwagi, Japan. Tony Perez was the referee.

The biggest surprise of the

afternoon was that Garcia appeared to be the harder puncher of the two. He came into the match with a 53-1-7 record, featuring only seven knockouts. Bumphus, on the other hand, had 16 early endings among his 21 victories. In the ring, it was Bumphus who was shaken a couple of times, while belaboring Garcia with nothing but arm punches.

The winner should be credited with fighting a highly disciplined fight. The temptation to tear into the tricky Garcia must have been almost overpowering at times. But Bumphus stuck to his game plan.

"I'm disappointed that it wasn't exciting," said the new champ. "But my trainer, George Benton, said: 'We'll just win this one and look good the next one.' Garcia was real crafty on the inside. He had a number of little tricks that fooled me at first, but I caught on after a while. I would have liked to have made a better showing for the crowd, but I'm glad I won."

Livingstone Bramble, 136, Passaic, N.J., won a unanimous 10 round decision over previously unbeaten Rafael Williams, 134, Panama, Bramble, the WBA's top contender for Ray Mancini's title, was forced to work hard all the way. Williams, now 19-1 (12 kayoes), nailed him coming in with hard shots, but Bramble never stopped coming and won by tallies of 8-2, 7-2-1, and 5-3-2. Referee, Arthur Mercante.

In another scheduled 10, Robert (Bam Bam) Hines, 146¾, Phila., TKO'd Ramon Abeldano, 147¾, Argentina, after six rounds. The undefeated Hines is now 16-0, 11 kayoes. Referee, Joe Cortez.

McCRORY-GUEST
WBC Welterweight Title

STERLING HEIGHTS, MICH.—WBC welterweight champion Milton McCrory didn't think he would have it as easy as he did against challenger Milton (Mad Dog) Guest in his first title defense. After fighting 24 hard rounds with Colin Jones to win the title, McCrory was ready for another rugged contest, one which never materialized.

For the first time in quite awhile, the champ's right was at full strength and ready. He used that right hand hard and often, icing Guest in 0:59 of the sixth round.

The two men felt each other out in the first minute of the first round. McCrory found that, while Guest moved awkwardly—a description usually reserved for the champ himself—he was easy to hit. Backing the "Mad Dog" into the ropes, McCrory, 147, Detroit, unleashed a good combo ending with a viscious cleanup hook that leveled Guest. The challenger, also 147, Yonkers, New York, beat referee Zack Clayton's count, but he was in bad shape as McCrory, over eager for a kayo, missed with several blows that might have finished the job. Another hard flurry floored Milton again, but the gutsy ex-marine rose and tried to tie up the champ's onslaught. Most fighters would have been finished at this point, but the overmatched Guest managed to last out the round.

The second frame was no easier on Guest, and a hard flurry drove him down through the ropes. A tremendous shot then had him bleeding at the mouth—a flow that would last for the rest of the contest—and two back-to-back McCrory right hands opened up a cut over the challenger's left optic.

Guest pulled himself together a little in the third round, as McCrory slowed his pace. The knockout, the champ knew, would come; there was no need to push it. A smooth and confident McCrory continued to dominate, and a hard right knocked Guest down again in round four.

The clincher came in the sixth inning, when McCrory pinned Guest to the ropes, threw a combination, and came up with a crushing right uppercut that sent Guest down again. The badly hurt challenger amazingly regained his feet again, but referee Clayton intervened. The "fight," as such, was over.

McCrory is now 22-0-1 with 18 knockouts, and his next bout might well be against former world champion Sugar Ray Leonard in what would be Milton's biggest payday. "If he wants to fight in May," said McCrory, "I'll take it like it is, but if he wants to fight in June or July, I'll take a tuneup first," Milton was a little irked by questions like "Are you ready for Leonard?" at the post fight press conference. "I'm the champion," said McCrory, "he (Leonard) has to come to me."

Guest, now 16-2, will have to take some time off after the viscious beating he endured. The "Mad Dog" was pushed too soon.

Darrell (TNT) Chambers, 150, Detroit, stopped Tom Moody, 150¾, Columbus, not out for round seven. Chambers is now 18-1 with 13 kayoes.

Dave Odem, 138, Sharon, Pa., won a majority decision over Lionel Johnson, also 138, Detroit, eight. Odem is now 13-3-2. Johnson is 11-2-1.

Frank Peavy, 148, New York, knocked out Mike Norman, 149, Cleveland, in 2:15 of the first round.

Elmus O'Neil, 141, Youngstown, Ohio, halted John Hearns (Thomas' brother), 142½, Detroit, at 1:29 of round four. O'Neil is now 2-0. Hearns, making his pro debut, was dropped in the once in the first session and twice more in the fourth before the ref stepped in.

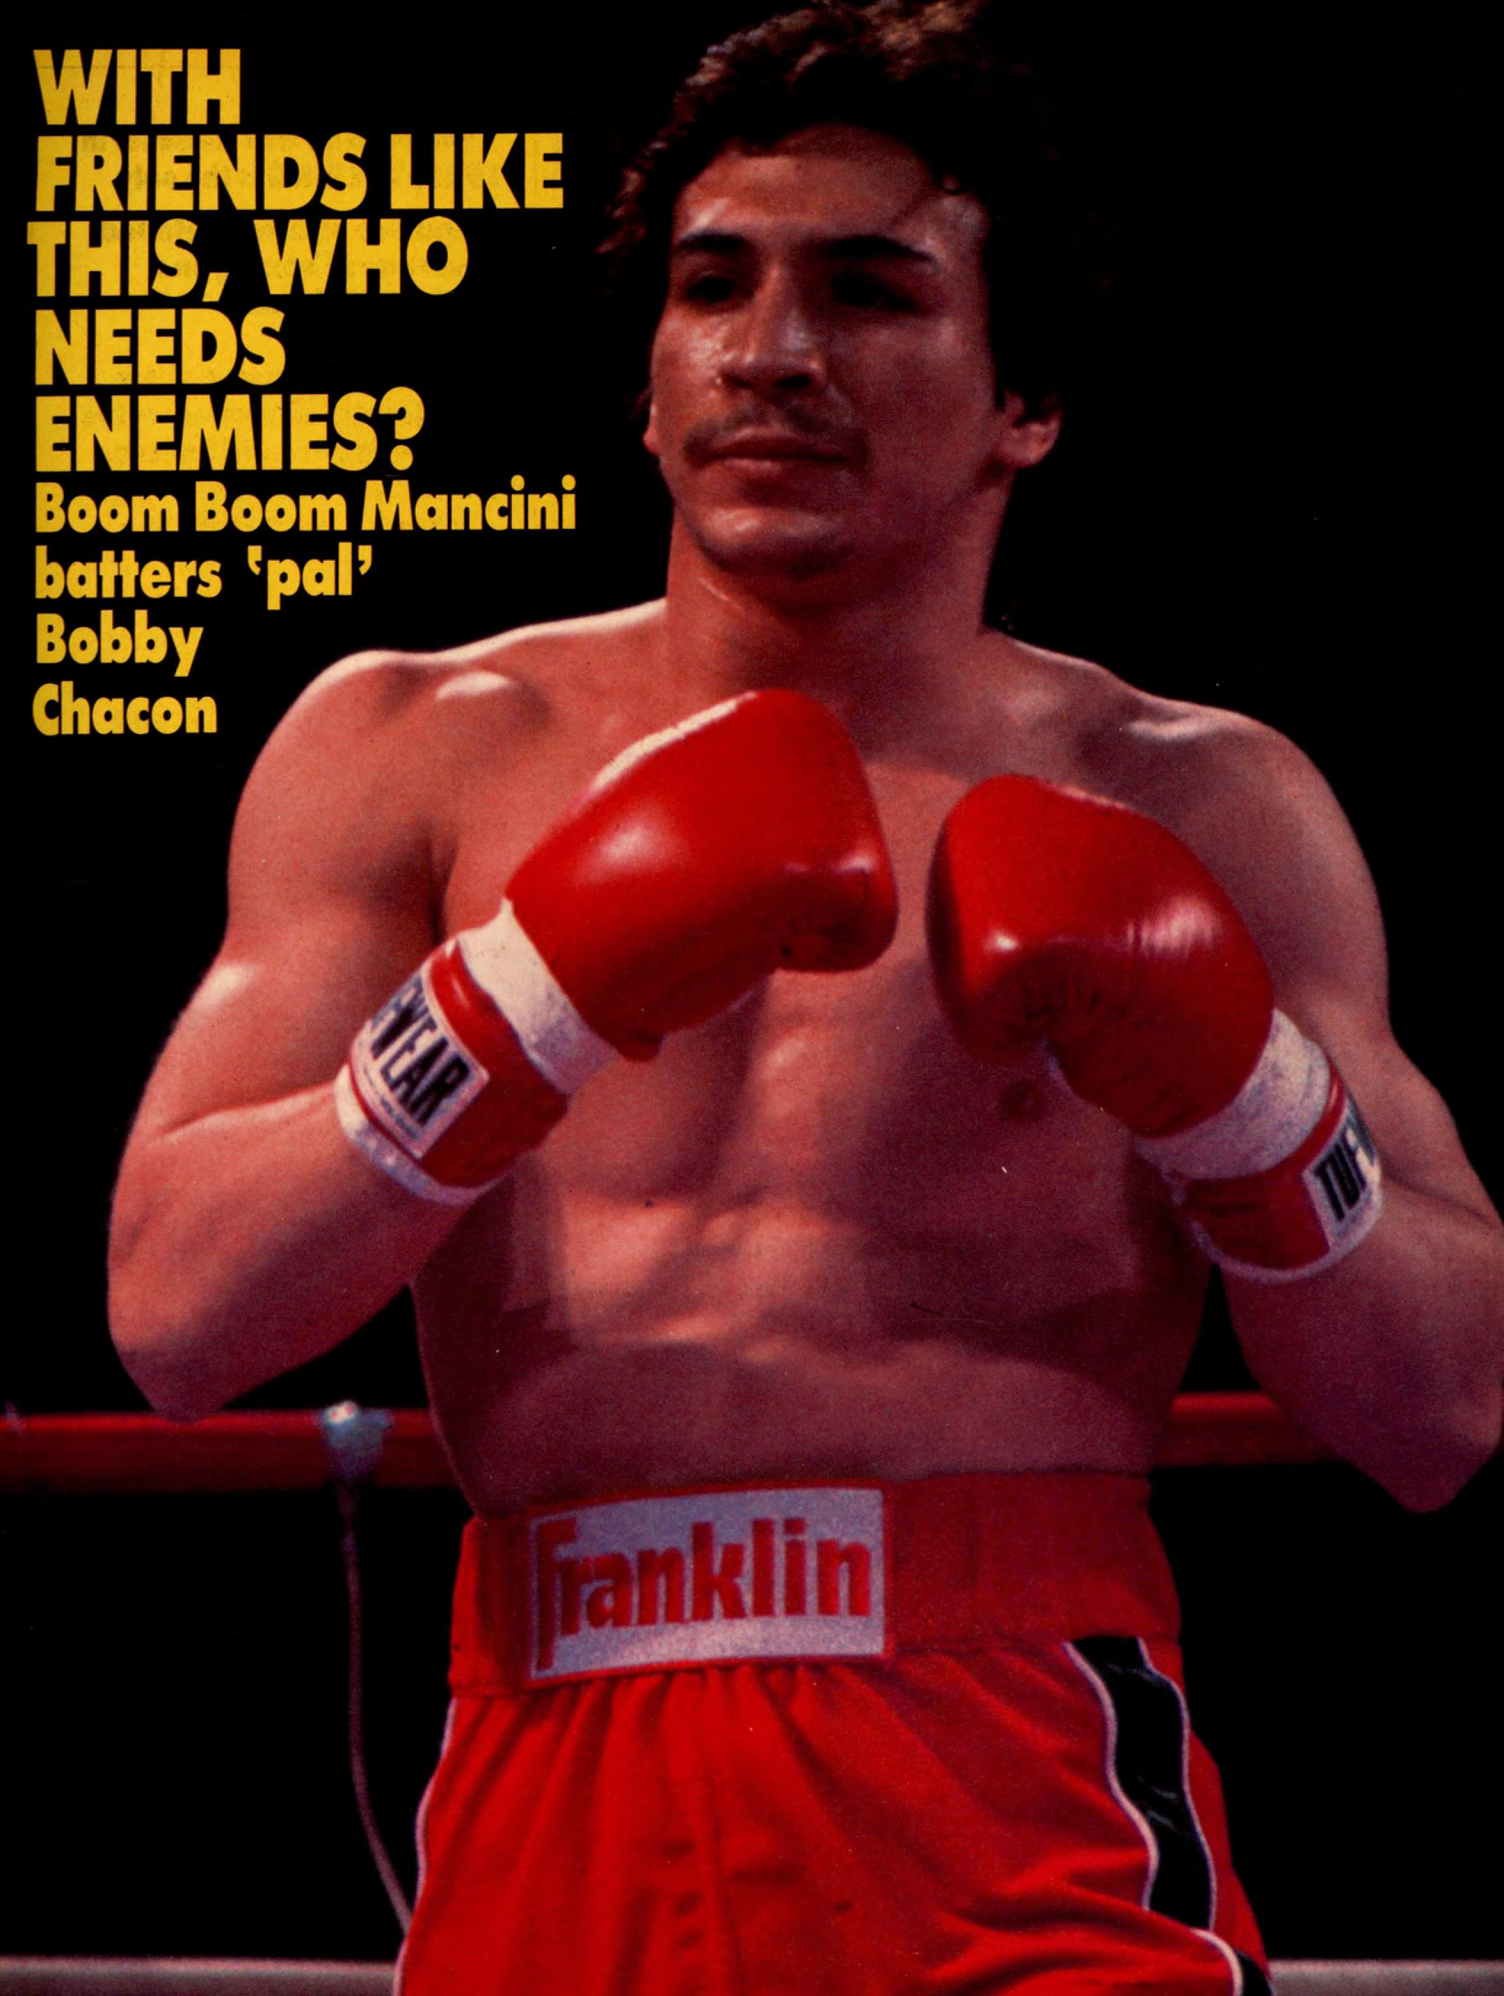
Boom Boom Mancini batters 'pal' Bobby Chacon



BY CHRISTOPHER COATS

RENO, NEV.—Don't believe anyone who calls Ray (Boom Boom) Mancini just another pretty face. The 22-year-old World Boxing Association lightweight champion looked like the bona fide goods in scoring a technical knockout over Bobby Chacon in the third round at the Lawlor Events Center.

Referee Richard Steele abruptly halted the fight at 1:07 of the third after Chacon had been rocked by three good punches while backed against the ropes. Though the former two-time world champion was bleeding profusely from a gash on his left eyelid, Chacon was neither defenseless nor in danger of going down, and was actually fighting back when Steele rushed in. Most of the 11,104 paying customers booed angrily, some hurled debris into the ring, others chanted "BULLSHIT"

Mancini, 134, took control from the opening bell, and by the second round, Chacon was bleeding from the nose and eyelid. Despite the strange ending, Mancini was quite impressive and it should raise the experts' opinion of his ability. Chacon, 133¾, nailed the champion with some clean shots to the face, but they had no effect. Mancini, from Youngstown, Ohio, proved he is more than just a brawler. Using a stiff jab and fast hands, he kept Chacon backing up following numerous toe-to-toe exchanges.

"He's my idol, yes, Bobby's my idol . . . he's such a great competitor," Mancini said at the hour-long post-fight press conference. Later, both fighters warmly embraced and exchanged laughs and compliments. Chacon said, "I thought you were my friend. What'd you beat me up for?"

Mancini, his record now 29-1, 23 by knockout, made the fourth successful defense of his title and received close to 2 million dollars for his labor. Next up for Mancini will likely be WBC junior lightweight champion Hector Camacho of New

How The Ring International Ratings Panel works: Boxing authorities from all six major continents have submitted their ballots—marked from one to ten to indicate their rankings under The Ring's champion—to reflect their evaluation of the relative challengers' positions. Their ballots were then weighted with scores of from ten (for a first-place vote) to one (for a tenth-place vote) and totaled up to provide the final standings. After the top ten were tabulated, those other fighters receiving votes were then listed in order, according to the number of votes received, from 11th on.

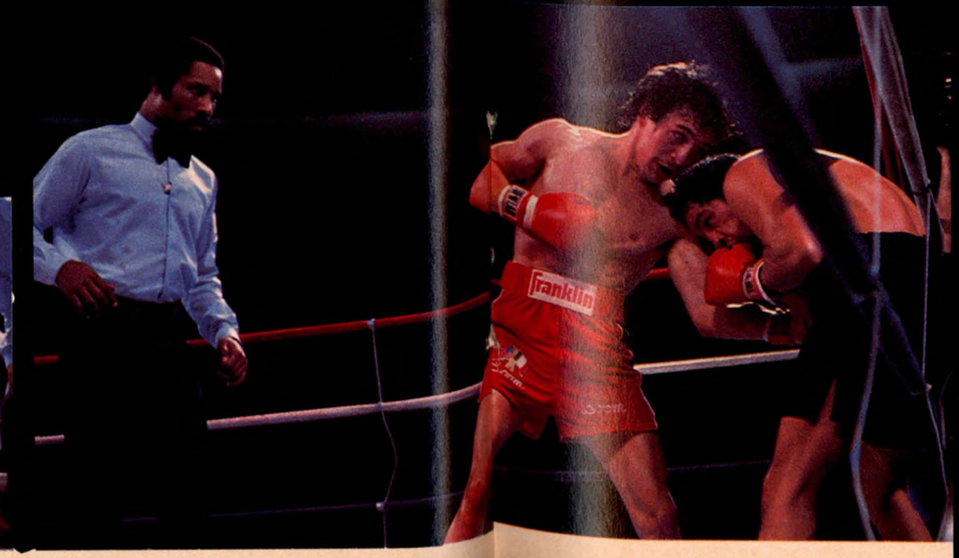
KING OF BEERS • ANHEUSER BUSCH, INC. • ST. LOUIS

GENUINE



York in what will be a terrific payday for both fighters. Many lightweight contenders have accused Mancini of avoiding them, but don't expect to hear that said with a straight face from now on. Mancini is improving and deserves recognition as the best lightweight in the world today.

Chacon, nearly 33 years old, failed in his attempt to become the eighth man in boxing history to win three world titles. Inactive for eight months, beleaguered by legal hassles with Don King and the World Boxing Council, his face prone to cuts, Bobby Chacon entered the ring a solid 4-1 underdog to the champion. Few fighters could ever match Chacon for style or excitement, and none could claim to have more heart than the one-time prodigy from the suburbs of Los Angeles. Now living in Oroville, Chacon has become a hero for the second time in his 12-year career. He was applauded loudly when he walked through the lobby of the MGM Grand Hotel on his way to the fight, and later, when he climbed into the ring, the packed crowd cheered for him wildly.

But this time, Chacon was reaching too far. (A panicky referee didn't help.) Despite the similar weights, Mancini looked like a 5 foot 5 inch fireplug on roller skates. One had the sense that eventually Chacon would have been overpowered, and later, Joe Ponce, Chacon's chief cornerman, said that he might have stopped the fight after the round because of the severe cut on the eyelid.

At the press conference, Richard Steele made an earnest case for his decision, and though the video replay hardly supported him, he may have been right. "I didn't want to see Bobby get hurt," he said, "and I thought that he had taken enough. I didn't want to count out a great champion. When Bobby fought Boza-Edwards I let him go on. But Mancini is a much harder puncher. I wanted it to end with this great champion standing and smiling."

Chacon did not accept the sudden ending, but he showed no bitterness and even called Richard Steele "my friend". "I don't blame Richard because he was just trying to protect me," said Bobby. "But I was never hurt in there. A lot of Ray's punches were missing or glancing off. He hit me on the top of the head, on the side, but he never hit me on the chin. I'm a slow starter, everybody knows that. I didn't think that Ray could keep up that pace, and that's what I was waiting for."

It was the best payday of Chacon's 12-year career. He received $725,000 for the fight, including about $150,000 from his court battle with the WBC and promoter Don King. Last May, the WBC stripped Bobby of his junior lightweight title. Chacon, his record now 52-7-1, must consider retirement. Recently married, Bobby's new wife, Melissa, is expecting a child soon, and whether a boy or girl, they plan to name it Alexis—as a tribute to a great world champion who once fought Bobby Chacon.

The card was a tremendous success for the Reno-Sparks Convention Authority. Robert Andreoli Productions put on a first-class promotion that resulted in a near sell-out at the Events Center. The Convention Authority paid $200,000 for the championship attraction; Home Box Office spent $1,175,000 for live telecast rights, while CBS-TV put out a hefty $425,000 for a delayed broadcast. The gate was $801,925, a record for northern Nevada.

"I've always fought with my heart, and I always will," Chacon said, when asked about his future. "Maybe this poor body of mine is worse than you think. It's about time for a long rest. My family needs me, and I need them more than I need fighting forever."

Adrian Arreola, 130, Los Angeles, stopped Jose Perez, 135, L.A., at 2:44 in the seventh in a scheduled 10-rounder.

Joey Olivo, 110½, Los Angeles, knocked out Jose Diaz, 108, Baja, Mexico, in the fifth of another scheduled 10-rounder.

Frankie Davis Jr., 143, Reno, was lucky to get a draw with Jose Hernandez, 146, El Paso, eight.

Carl Jones, 159, Los Angeles, won a unanimous decision over Dewayne Jamison, 159, Tacoma, eight.

Mark Lee, 206, Carson City, knocked out Inoke Katoa, 216, Tonga, halfway into the first in a scheduled 8-rounder.

Luis Espinosa, 129, Phoenix, flattened Arnold White, 131, San Diego, in the first.

Boom Boom's Options Are Open After Blow out of Chacon

WHAT'S NEXT FOR MANCINI?

BY RANDY GORDON

"WE'RE NOT FIGHTING LIVINGSTONE BRAMble right away!"

"Howard Davis? Hasn't he retired?"

"Ray really wants Kenny Bogner, and it's not that he thinks Bogner is worthy and it's not because of the money involved. He wants Bogner because he hates the guy!"

The voice on the other end of the telephone was pulling no punches. The voice on the other end of the telephone belonged to David Wolf, manager of WBA lightweight king Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini.

"Ray deserves a rest," said Wolf a few days after his fighter stopped Bobby Chacon in the third round, his third fight in a four-month span.

"After winning the title from (Art) Frias, look at all the number one contenders he's fought, regardless of whether RING recognizes them as such. There was (Ernesto) Espana, (Duk-Koo) Kim and (Orlando) Romero. That's all in the span of less than a year-and-a-half. On top of that, Ray also fought (George) Feeney. All those fights in something like 16 months. The only so-called "breather" Ray had was Johnny Torres. But how about all the training Ray went through in preparation for the fight. Ray trains as hard—if not harder—than any fighter in the game. It hasn't been easy on him, believe me."

On January 22, Livingstone Bramble outpointed Panama's Rafael Williams over 10 rounds. The winner (according to the WBA), now becomes the mandatory challenger for Mancini's crown. Wolf, however, is not rushing into signing for a defense against Bramble.

"We'll fight Bramble if we have to, but why should we?" stated Wolf. "Who is Livingstone Bramble and what does he mean in terms of dollars and cents? Sure, Bramble may be the number one contender, but as I said before, Ray has been fighting one top contender after another. The WBA has been very reasonable, as far as we're concerned. They've been more than fair. As I said, we'll fight Bramble, we don't really care, but wouldn't it be nice if both sides could make as much money as possible? I think Dan Duva (Bramble's promoter) should build Bramble up more. Who knows him? He's an interesting personality, but nobody outside of his hometown of Passaic, New Jersey, knows him. There are several fighters with that kind of problem—a lack of exposure. Ray can make lots of money defending his title. Let's face it, Bramble isn't the guy who's gonna help him make it."

Another top fighter Wolf isn't thrilled about having Mancini defend his crown against is Youngstown, Ohio, rival, Harry Arroyo, who earned a top-10 rating on January 14 with a 10-round decision over Robin Blake.

"A Mancini-Arroyo fight is good in only one place right now—Youngstown!" stated Wolf. "We could pack any building or arena there. No place there is too big for this fight. But, outside of Youngstown, who cares? A couple of more victories and some more exposure for Arroyo, then I think we'll have something big. I can't see a Mancini-Arroyo fight happening until next year."

Wolf then took off on a verbal journey to explain his managerial position with Mancini: As a manager, it's my job to build a fighter up, to get him publicity, to put him into fights which I believe he can win and help him earn the most money possible. Sometimes you gotta go to war to earn the money. That's where the manager comes in.

Ray's fighting style dictates that he be the aggressor. He's 5'6". I don't know any top lightweight contender who's as short. Ray has to bore in to make the fight. Early rounds can give him problems, because the other guy is fresh. In the later rounds, nobody is better than Ray. But getting there is what can give a manager ulcers. A lot of contenders out there will give him those kind of problems in the early rounds. Ray and Murphy (Griffith, Mancini's trainer) and I know Ray can beat all of them, but the question becomes bottom line—how much is Ray going to earn?"

With the injury-prone WBC lightweight champion Edwin Rosario only recently back in action after nearly nine months on the shelf, Wolf called Mancini "The REAL lightweight champion." He added, "If you were to take a poll and ask who the lightweight champion is, I wouldn't be surprised if 99% of the people answered 'Ray Mancini.' I don't believe Ray has to go to war to convince that other 1%."

About a possible unification fight against Rosario, Wolf said, "There's not much chance of that happening right now. First of all, Rosario is committed to two fights. One is against Roberto Elizondo, the other is against Jose Luis Ramirez. Jimmy Jacobs and Bill Cayton (Rosario's managers) are too astute as businessmen to make that match now. There's big money in it down the road. But certainly, not now."

Going into 1984, Robin Blake and Howard Davis had been mentioned as possible opponents for Mancini. Then, on January 14, Blake lost to Harry Arroyo. It was Blake's second loss in a row. Last October, he lost to Tyrone Crawley. Davis didn't have the same problem as Blake, He didn't lose. He didn't even fight. His last fight was in June, 1983, a TKO victory over Greg Coverson.

"Davis' people offered us $3½ million to defend against him," said Wolf, "They asked us to break the Chacon contract and fight Davis. I told him 'I don't do those kind of things.' I told them we'd certainly fight Davis for that kind of money, as soon as Chacon was out of the way. I said 'Show me your intent.' They never showed me. All I know is they're running around saying we're ducking them. We call him 'Coward' Davis. He was supposed to fight Tyrone Crawley in January. We had a pool when he would pull out. Guess what? He did pull out. When Davis cleans up his own act, then we might talk with him. Until then, I don't see where he fits in."

About the fading Blake, Wolf said, "His sudden deterioration saddens me. He's a likable kid. Something's wrong. Too many of these guys flare up quickly, then just as quickly burn out. I've got to laugh when I think of the list of names we were supposedly ducking. 'Gato' Gonzalez. John Verderosa. Al 'Earthquake' Carter. Where are these guys now?"

Three other names thrown at Wolf as possible opponents were Tyrone Crawley, Ken Bogner and Alvin Hayes.

"Ray absolutely hates Bogner," said Wolf. "It all started in South Africa. Bogner was verbally offensive and abusive. He went overboard. When Ray broke his collarbone, Bogner went around saying Ray had faked the injury. Please! Imagine faking an injury to get out of a million dollar payday against Bogner. We'd have to be out of our minds!"

As for Crawley, who has looked nothing short of world-class in his last two outings (victories over Stevie Romero and Robin Blake), Wolf said, "Nobody's ever proposed a match with him. I'd have to say it's a moot point right now, however. We'd make a heck of a lot more against Bogner."

Then in as surprise a statement as you've ever heard any manager way, Wolf exclaimed "Heck no!" to a match against unbeaten, 6'3" Detroit lightweight Alvin Hayes. "I won't throw a 5'6" guy in with a guy 7'6"! We'll fight the top half or the bottom half, but we won't fight both halves together! You've got to throw a jump shot to hit the guy! You ask if I'm ducking him. Yeh, I'm ducking him!"

The two big-money matches in Mancini's future are two unbeaten fighters. One is Hector "Macho" Camacho. The other is Aaron Pryor.

"I'd have to say both fights will take place on the far side of the Olympics, not before," said Wolf. "Between the two fights, Pryor is the man we want. We've always believed we could beat him, and have never changed our opinion. However, I'd like to see Pryor have some kind of title. Right now, he's nothing but inactive. If he should fight for and win the IBF junior welterweight crown, then I think we could talk seriously. I think $5 million apiece is very reasonable. But Pryor is the man we really want. You can see it in the eyes of the money men we've been talking to. They like Camacho, but they love Pryor. That's the fight everybody wants to see. Ray Mancini vs. Aaron Pryor." □

▲CHICAGO—DiVinci Manor—Three 10-rounders headlined, but the crowd draw was the long awaited rematch between Lenny LaPaglia and Danny Blake. These middleweights were last paired on August 22, 1983 in a match that marked LaPaglia's "comeback" after his sensational national TV loss to John Collins back in March. Lenny, however, lost that August bout to Danny on a third round TKO when he "retired" because he had trouble breathing.

LaPaglia's followers were hoping they would again see their "rock 'em, sock 'em" battler in action, but they sat in stunned silence as Lenny looked listless and shell shocked against Blake. It did not take Danny long to sense his opportunity. A right to the body followed by a right to the chin put LaPaglia on the canvas and earned Blake a first round knockout at 1:46.

HENRY ARMSTRONG'S WHIRLWIND MONTH 5 Title Defenses In 22 Days For the Triple-Crown Champion

BY HERBERT G. GOLDMAN

HENRY ARMSTRONG, FROM 1936 TO 1940, was boxing's answer to the "immovable object" proposed by physics. He was like an atomic powered tank, and no featherweight in the world could stand up to him. Neither, so it seemed, could any lightweight, welterweight, or middleweight.

Henry started boxing as an amateur in 1930 at the age of 17, had two pro fights under the name "Melody Jackson" in July, 1931, and then resumed his amateur career. (Rocky Marciano pulled a similar trick in 1947.) In 1932, Armstrong lost a decision to Johnny Hines in the featherweight finals of the Sourthern California Amateur Tournament, a decision so debatable that the Los Angeles A. C. arranged to have Henry represent the section as a bantam in the National Championships in San Francisco. The eventual goal was a place on the U. S. Olympic team, but making 118 pounds weakened Armstrong; he lost to Jess LaBarba in the National Finals.

Henry turned pro a short while later. He won most of his fights from 1932 to 1935. Even then, Hank was a "perpetual motion" crowd pleaser, but he had not yet developed the punch that would make him a triple champion. That came with training, experience, and maturity. By August, 1936, when Henry outpointed Baby Arizmendi in Los Angeles' Wrigley Field, he was the Armstrong boxing fans would thrill to and remember.

Wirt Ross managed Henry then, but couldn't do much with him. Luckily, there were important people sitting ringside at the Arizmendi fight. Among them were Al Jolson, his wife, Ruby Keeler, and boxing manager Eddie Mead, who handled the great bantam, Joe Lynch, in the twenties. Jolson a big boxing buff since 1900, was impressed with Armstrong, and said so to Mead and Ruby.

"That's the kind of fighter you should be managing, Eddie," said Miss Keeler. Mead had done Ruby a big favor twelve years earlier, when she was a fifteen-year-old kid tap dancing in New York speakeasies. Ruby knew a lot of mob connected men in those days; Eddie Mead was only one of them.

Mead was now in bad financial shape, and Jolson, to repay him for the favor done his wife, gave Eddie $5,000 to buy Armstrong's contract.

Armstrong still remembers Mead as "a great guy who robbed me blind." Mead was far from the most honest boxing manager who ever lived, and he was an incurable horse player. Eddie lost more money than he won, and, in order to make ends meet, he kept Armstrong just as busy as Wirt Ross had kept him—even after Hank became a triple champ.

This background is necessary in order to understand Henry's never-to-be-equaled feat of October, 1939—five title defenses in one month!

Henry had already relinquished his world featherweight title, and had lost the lightweight crown back to Lou Ambers (who found a way to beat Armstrong by jumping up so that Hank's body punches landed low), but he still had the welter diadem. It was that crown crown he put on the line in five billed title contests in October. Three of the five bouts were 10-round outings (including one in California, where 15-round affairs were not allowed until 1943), but all were bona fide title defenses.

Boxing's most incredible month saw Henry Armstrong defend his welterweight title five times in three weeks. A decision against Jimmy Garrison and a fourth-round stoppage of Bobby Pacho were the final fights of Armstrong's incredible month.

In May, 1939, when he began a five-month lay-off, Armstrong weighed 135 pounds. By October, when he returned to action, Henry was a solid 140-pounder, and never weighted less than 136 again.

The first of Henry's five October title bouts was against Al Manfredo, 146¾, Fresno, California, in a scheduled 10-rounder at Riverview Park Arena in Des Moines on Monday night, October 9. After a comparatively tame first two rounds, Hammerin' Hank opened up in the third with an attack that left Manfredo dazed. Armstrong, 141½, resumed his assault in the fourth frame, and ref Alex Fidler stopped the contest at 1:35 of the session with Manfredo battered helplessly against the ropes.

Four nights later, Henry beat a Friday-the-13th jinx when he faced 20-1 underdog Howard Scott, 147, Washington, D.C., in a scheduled 10 at the Armory in Minneapolis. Armstrong, 141, pumped his vaunted trip-hammer rights and lefts to Scott's head and body until Howard collapsed in 1:38 of the second round in a mismatch before a crowd of 4,000.

One week later, on Friday night, October 20, Henry put his title on the line again, this time in a scheduled 15-rounder against Richie Fontaine, 141, Missoula, Montana, in Seattle's Civic Stadium. Fontaine had won and lost in two fights against Armstrong in California early in 1936.

A common assumption is that Armstrong simply overwhelmed his opponents, and that the men he fought only sought to back away in vain. In fact, a number of Hank's foes opted to slug it out with him—including Petey Sarron, who Henry kayoed in six rounds to win the featherweight crown. Sarron carried the fight to Armstrong, and actually outpunched him for the first four rounds. What made Armstrong unique and so hard to defeat was his remarkable endurance. He could keep punching almost indefinitely, and his body blows slowed Sarron up for the knockout that followed.

Fontaine was the same. He won the first round, but almost exhausted himself in the process, and Armstrong started connecting with what the Associated Press called "gloved dynamite" in round two. A left to the jaw dropped Richie at the beginning of the second, and four more knockdowns followed. Each time, the game Fontaine struggled to his feet, sometimes with no count; none of the counts went above four. Richie was brave, or possibly too dazed to play the game of staying down till nine. (No mandatory eight-counts were in effect.)

Richie looked wobbly when he answered the bell for the third session, and went down for a six-count after weathering a flurry. He rose, but was floored again by a punch to the jaw, and his seconds threw the towel in before referee Tommy Clark could start his count. The time of the round was 2:03.

Four nights—count 'em—four nights later, Henry put his title on the line against tough Jimmy Garrison in a 10-rounder at the Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles. Garrison, 139½, Kansas City, forced the action, and took the first four rounds before Armstrong's incessant punching began to tell. The fifth round was even, and Armstrong pulled out the decision by backing Garrison across the ring and winning the last five innings. A crisp right to the head spilled Jimmy for a one-count in round eight. Armstrong weighted 138¼ for this one, and the referee was George Blake. A rematch, in the Cleveland Arena on December 11, saw Armstrong kayo Garrison in seven.

Tuesday, October 30, six nights after beating Garrison, Hank TKO'd Bobby Pacho in the fourth round of a scheduled 15-rounder in front of 4,500 people in Denver's Municipal Auditorium. Pacho did not look in good shape, but he tried to make a fight of it. In the fourth frame, he shuffled to ring center and traded punches with Armstrong at close quarters. Henry quickly pounded Pacho to the ropes and beat him on the face and belly until the challenger's arms dangled at his sides. His head bobbed from side to side and he looked unable to defend himself when referee Jack Bloom stopped the bout shortly after the one-minute mark. Like Manfredo, Scott, Fontaine, and Garrison, Pacho outweighed Armstrong—146 to 140 in this case.

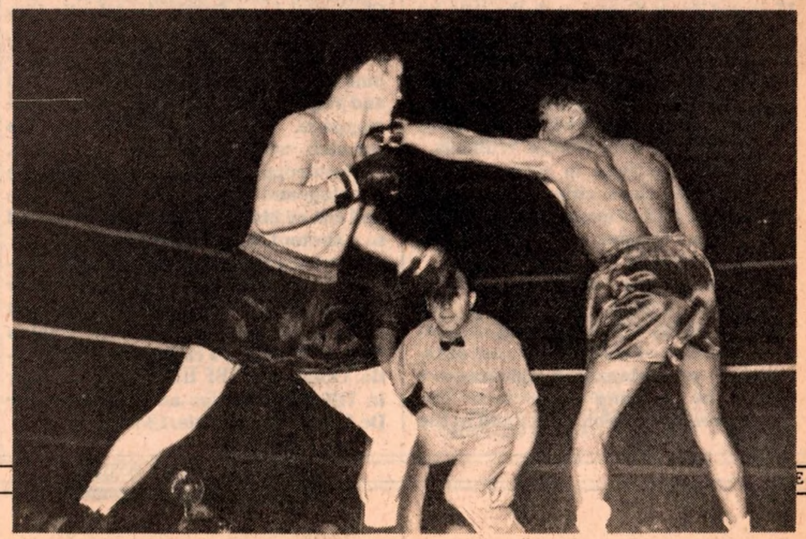
Armstrong had defended the world's welterweight title five times within 22 days—a little over three week's time. He had scored a total of nine knockdowns in approximately 63 minutes and 25 seconds of fighting—a little more than 21 total rounds of actual ring combat.

Henry went on to defend the welter title seven more times before losing it to the battle-scarred master of tricks, Fritzie Zivic, in Madison Square Garden on October 4, 1940. Henry even won the world middleweight title; at least that's what most fans who saw his 10-rounder with Ceferino Garcia in Los Angeles' Gilmore Stadium thought. But ref George Blake took enough rounds away for "foul blows" to enable Garcia to retain his title on a draw. Those "in the know" knew that a draw was the only decision Blake was allowed to make.

A rematch with Zivic on January 17, 1941 saw Armstrong TKO'd in 0:52 of the 12th. Henry should have had enough money to retire, but lack of funds forced him to return to the ring less than a year and a half later. He continued to campaign with success—but very little of the old-time flair—until February, 1945.

Jolson never saw a dime of what he gave Mead to buy Armstrong's contract; he washed his hands of Eddie after an argument at a dinner in Los Angeles' Roosevelt Hotel in February, 1938. Armstrong's purses were infinitesimal compared to what fighters like Ray Leonard, Larry Holmes, and Aaron Pryor make today, but they were enough to keep Eddie Mead's bookmaker more than happy. The money Henry actually got from making five defenses in three weeks would not keep certain current world champs in the "good life" for more than a few days.

In 1951, Henry Armstrong became an ordained minister. He's 71 years old as of this writing, and, doubtless, prays a little for the soul of Eddie Mead. Armstrong is that kind of man. □



'RING' RECOGNIZES CRUISERWEIGHTS, WORLD CHAMP

De LEON 190-Pounders Become 13th Weight Class To Be Ranked

BY BEN SHARAV

WITH THIS ISSUE, THE RING ADDS the cruiserweight division to the monthly International Ratings, bringing to 13, the number of RING-ranked weight classes. Carlos De Leon of Puerto Rico, the World Boxing Council 190-pound titleholder, receives RING recognition as World Cruiserweight Champion.

The cruiserweights become the fifth new division to be recognized by THE RING since the quaint old days when professional boxing was conducted with only the eight "traditional" weight classes—heavyweight, light heavyweight, middleweight, welterweight, lightweight, featherweight, bantamweight and flyweight. The junior welterweight and junior lightweight classes were recognized by THE RING beginning in 1962, the junior middleweights were added in 1974 and the junior featherweights tacked on in 1979.

The cruiserweight division was created by the WBC in December, 1979 with the sanctioning of a 190-pound title fight between Marvin Camel and Mate Parlov, a fight which ended in a 15-round draw. Camel took the title by winning the rematch the following March. The World Boxing Association joined the fun in February, 1982, staging its own 190-pound, junior heavyweight title fight which saw Ossie Ocasio triumph over Robbie Williams.

THE RING declined to recognize the cruiserweight class, citing a. tradition, b. a general lack of quality fighters competing in the division and c. the public's lack of interest in the class.

We no longer believe that the arguments against recognizing the cruiserweights are persuasive or that our readers—boxing fans, sportswriters, promoters and fighters—are served by denying plain fact. The cruiserweight division exists and to the extent that our ratings are relied upon as an independent, unbiased check on the suspect listings of the WBA and WBC, they should accurately reflect the goings-on in the sport. The year 1983 saw exciting action in the cruiserweight class; it has become contrived and futile to continue putting the top cruiserweights in the heavyweight and light heavyweight rankings. The decision to recognize the cruiserweight division was made by RING Editor Randy Gordon with the unanimous concurrence of the editorial staff.

WBC CRUISERWEIGHT CHAMPION CARLOS De Leon has clearly and convincingly established his supremacy in the division. The 24-year-old, 6 foot ½ inch tall boxer-puncher first won the WBC crown on a decision over Marvin Camel in 1980. De Leon retained the title by knocking out Camel in a 1982 rematch, but then lost it to S. T. Gordon, who blitzed him in the second round early that summer.

De Leon was determined to recapture his title in 1983 and he did just that. The road back began with an elimination bout against former World Heavyweight Champion Leon Spinks in Atlantic City in March. The native of Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico used a controlled, counter-punching attack to batter Neon Leon and register an impressive sixth-round stoppage. In July De Leon got his rematch with Gordon in Las Vegas. Carlos dropped the muscular S. T. in the opening and closing frames, beat the hell out of him in between, and romped to a shutout, unanimous decision.

The victories over Spinks and Gordon—both of whom were rated better fighters than WBA junior heavyweight champion Ocasio—cement Carlos "Sugar" De Leon's claim to the world title. Ocasio and IBF titlist Camel appear in THE RING ratings as contenders for De Leon's World Title. □

KENNY LEONARD

HE IS 34 YEARS OLD, AND HAS WORKED AS A truck driver, an insurance man, in hospitals, "and just about every other job you can think of."..."I knew none of those jobs were for me," said Kenny Leonard, the second-oldest of seven children. "I wanted to do something that was creative, that was challenging, something where I'd be around people. I began to think about promoting. I didn't know what I was going to promote, I just wanted to promote something."...He began to watch, study and admire Don King, for boxing had become a major part of his life—his younger brother is Sugar Ray Leonard..."I idolized Don King," said Leonard, "not for anything special he promoted, but for the way he acted around people. He's just got this way with them. I decided to try my hand in promoting boxing. So first I decided to learn the business."...In 1978, he expressed his desire to learn to his brother, Ray, who told Kenny, "It's fine with me if you want to learn. Come on aboard and see what it's all about."...Kenny did, and has been enthralled by promoting ever since...Kenny tried boxing in 1965 and didn't do badly until one day, an opponent drew blood from his nose..."I got scared," said Leonard. "I didn't like that. I never boxed again."...Actually, he did box one more time—only one more time!..."It was right after the 1976 Olympics," recalled Kenny. "Ray had come home with the gold medal and the family was so proud of him. But, remember, this is my little brother. I couldn't picture that he could be so good. We were over my sister's house and I challenged Ray to box. We had some gloves there, and Ray said okay. We boxed in the living room after moving all the furniture. I figured it would be so easy to smack my little brother around. But when we got going, I couldn't hit him. Then, he started hitting me anywhere he wanted. It was so easy for him. Then he pushed me in a corner and wouldn't let me out. That's when I really started to respect fighters"...Leonard has promoted five shows in and around the Washington, D.C./Virginia area, and has plans of running "many more shows in that area, really bringing boxing there back to life." In addition, Kenny has a promotional hand (an upper promotional hand) in all of brother Ray's fights..."I'm not in this just to promote Ray's fights," says Kenny. "Ray is not going to fight forever. I'm dreaming of the top, just like those four-round kids are dreaming of becoming a champ one day. I'm going to keep promoting and promoting, and hopefully one day, all that hard work will make me the top promoter in the game."

CEDRIC KUSHNER SAYS HE DOESN'T SMILE IN photographs...he should...He has plenty reason to smile...Born 35 years ago in Capetown, South Africa, Kushner came to America in 1971 with dreams of becoming a successful businessman...He worked in warehouses, hitchiked to Florida looking for his pot of gold, only to become a hotel janitor, and he ran a Ferris wheel at a New Jersey amusement park...In between he was in Munich, Germany, scalping tickets for the 1972 Olympic Games...A Texas businessman to whom Kushner sold some tickets befriended him, telling him "call me if you ever get to the States and need some help."...When Kushner returned, he did call, and his friend loaned him $5,000 to get started in business...A few months later, Kushner began promoting rock n' roll concerts at a college in Plymouth, Massachusetts..." At the time," related Kushner, "I was living and working out of my friend's living room. When I'd get calls from prospective clients, I'd make up some excuse that I was running out and that I'd have to meet them later at some restaurant. I closed a lot of deals that way."...The first major group Kushner promoted was the heavy metal band, Steppenwolf. From there, the rest was easy. Fleetwood Mac, Joni Mitchell, The Doobie Brothers, Tom Jones and Bob Seger were just some of the musical talent he promoted in the next several years...In 1980, Kushner became involved—and hooked—on boxing. He became manager of club-fighting middleweight Teddy Mann...However, sharing in Mann's meager purses was no way for Kushner to get rich, so he pressed on...In 1981, he found what he was looking for—a heavyweight. A talented heavyweight. A talented, South African heavyweight named Gerrie Coetzee. The two have been together since...Kushner has promoted boxing shows for NBC-TV in Atlantic City and Chicago, but the biggest promotion of his life is still to be made—Larry Holmes vs. Gerrie Coetzee...With all the money he stands to make from that, it's a wonder Cedric Kushner doesn't smile in pictures!
